FHA's Limit On Insurance Raised From 2 to 3 Billion

President Orders Increase in Depleted Authorization to Guarantee Mortgages

Housing, which led in the Nation's recovery struggles through some of the darkest days of the recession, yesterday was provided by President Roosevelt with another $1,000,000,000 of Federal support for the construction drive.

The President announced that he had increased from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 the limit of mortgages that may be insured by the Federal Housing Administration, which, he said, was nearing the figure set in the amended FHA act of last February.

In a letter to Mr. Roosevelt, dated December 6, Stewart McDonald, FHA administrator, wrote of the need for the additional authorization, and said:

"The amended national housing act, with its liberalized provisions for encouraging the financing of homes in the moderate price class by private lending institutions, has been in operation for ten months. This period has witnessed substantial recovery in the residential construction industry, especially in the building of single family homes costing less than $6,000. It seems apparent now that, largely because of the effectiveness of the amended act, 1938 will be the most prosperous home building year since 1929. Nevertheless, decent housing facilities in the United States are still grossly inadequate. An enormous task lies ahead in promoting sufficient construction to meet the country's needs.

Demand Increases

"The demand for services of the FHA is constantly increasing. FHA mortgage-insuring operations are running more than double the rate of a year ago.

"As of December 1 the FHA had insured or had outstanding commitments including firm and conditional commitments to insure mortgages amounting to $1,585,000,000. In transacting this volume of business, the FHA has incurred net losses of approximately $153,000, to meet which it has reserves available now in the treasury amounting to $23,000,000. Income from insurance premiums and appraisal fees now approximates $1,000,000 a month. For the fiscal year 1940, therefore, the FHA should be able to operate the mutual insurance system at little or no expense to the Federal Government and at the same time add substantially to the reserve fund to meet possible future losses.

"On December 1 the unobligated balance of the $2,000,000,000 insurance authorization stood at $415,000,000. In addition, mortgages in process of appraisal at December 1 amounted to $115,000,000 and applications for mortgage insurance with appraisal fees paid are being received at the rate of more than $100,000,000 a month."

The President's reply said "it is obvious" that if the insuring of eligible applications is to be continued for the remainder of this fiscal year and for the fiscal year 1940 the increased authorization is necessary.

November Big Month

The development came shortly after an FHA report that its mortgage insuring operations in November showed a higher percentage of gain over the corresponding month of 1937 than any other month since amendment of the housing act last February. A steady increase in home construction activities had been reflected by the monthly FHA reports since the recession-inspired changes in the act last winter.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce reported yesterday that construction activity throughout the country would approximate $8,800,000,000 this year, the largest total reported in any year since 1930.

U. S. Counter-Spies Planned by Pittman

Foreign Relations Chief Will Offer Bill To Forestall Wartime Sabotage; Fears Agents Will Stir Up Bunds, Communists

By Edward T. Folliard

Chairman Key Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee announced yesterday that he was planning to round out America's preparedness program by introducing legislation aimed at foreign spies, particularly at those bent on wartime sabotage.

The tall Nevada Senator, who probably is closer to the espionage problem than any man in Congress, said that the popular conception of a spy in this country was entirely too narrow.

PITTMAN

"We are not so much worried about the gumshoe type of spy who intrigues with a chambermaid and tries to steal blue prints," Senator Pittman said. "That is petty stuff. As a matter of fact, there aren't many secrets about our Army and Navy. A spy could sit in the galleries of the Senate and House and hear all about the size and strength of our fighting services.

"No. What we are concerned about are the far more clever spies who might work out a program of sabotage in the United States. Unfortunately there are plenty of recruits available and American citizens at that. They are to be found in the bunds, Communist groups and other ideological societies.

"There is no law against these societies and I doubt if we want one. We would like to think that most of the members would be loyal in time of war. We know it is a fact, though, that among them there are fanatics, people so obsessed on racial or ideological grounds that they would go to any length to help out their particular 'cause.'

"These people often are good citizens except for their particular mania. They may pay their taxes, contribute to the Community Chest and live properly in all other ways. But on the question of the "old country," or some racial or ideological prejudice, they are monomaniacs.

"It is among such people that the foreign spies, the really important spies, can find recruits for their sabotage organization. The damage such an organization could do in time of war, blowing up mills, oil wells and power plants would be far worse than the loss of a battle.

"Actually we wouldn't have to be engaged in a war to have it happen. It might be that a group of other countries were at war and that sabotage would be ordered to prevent our sending supplies—steel, say, or food—to one of the combatants.

"A widespreau sabotage organization can't be set up overnight. It would be too dangerous; the foreign

U.S. Rests In Missing Witness Case

Man in Title Role Tells of 'Circus Tickets' He Got While He Was Away

By Dillard Stokes.

With testimony by Frank E. Speicher, who plays the title role in "the Mystery of the Missing Witness," the Government yesterday rested its case against Joseph Silverman, jr., his brother, Nathan, and former Brig. Gen. Alexander E. Williams, who went on trial Monday for conspiring to hide Speicher from a House committee that investigated alleged War Department graft in 1934.

Justice Proctor took under advisement defense pleas for immediate acquittal on grounds that the Government hasn't proved a conspiracy existed.

The Silvermans buy surplus war materials and sell them both in America and to foreign armies. Williams used to be in the Quartermaster General's headquarters.

Speicher told the court Monday how he became the missing witness when he heard he was going to be asked questions. He said Joseph Silverman told him he would get in a lot of trouble and the general might shoot him if he came back to Washington, where he could be asked about the $4,500 he lent the general to pay off the mortgage on the general's artichoke farm in North Carolina.

Got "Circus Tickets"

He stayed in New York where he couldn't do Gen. Williams—whom they all called "Grampaw"—any harm and he said that every once in a while he would send a lawyer around to get "circus tickets" in "little blue envelopes" that Silverman would leave for him. These envelopes actually contained money, $900 in all, Speicher said.

When he returned to the stand yesterday Speicher identified some of the little blue envelopes when they were shown him by Irvin Goldstein, special assistant to the Attorney General.

It was the House Military Affairs Committee which wanted to ask Speicher about the artichoke farm loan, but the committee didn't miss anything while Speicher was in New York, he said Silverman told him, because he would call up Silverman and give him information and Silverman would give it to the committee.

How He Was "Tipped Off"

Attorney Robert E. Lynch, counsel for Gen. Williams, started the cross-examination. Speicher told him that it was Norman K. Haig, General Motors Corporation sales executive, who tipped him off that the grand jury was going to investigate. Speicher used to help Haig sell trucks when he could, he said.

Continuing the cross-examination, William E. Leahy, who with Frank Aranow, of New York, and Vincent

Eden, at Washington's Tomb, Finds Peace After Busy Day

Briton Shy of Female Admirers as He Visits Roosevelt and Views Shrines of U. S. Great

By Sidney Olson.

Before the red brick tomb at Mount Vernon, Capt. Anthony Eden yesterday found a moment of the peace he has argued for all over Europe.

In all the day of hand-shaking, mumbled introductions, fluttering feminine handkerchiefs and speechmaking, the 41-year-old Right Hon. Anthony Eden, M. C., M. P., had no single moment to himself until he stepped before the ivy-covered vault where lie George and Martha Washington.

Then, for a little bit, there was a quiet broken only by the soft whirr of the newsreel cameras as the brilliant diplomat (who hates to be called "young") clutched the iron grill and stared at the sarcophagus of the great American who was a warm friend of his own great-great-grandfather, Sir Robert Eden, last Colonial Governor of Maryland.

Eden stepped back; cameramen renewed their day-long noisy jostle for positions; the clatter of voices rose.

Has a Busy Day

With easy good humor, England's unofficial visitor submitted with an air of gratitude to a grueling day's engagements that took him to the White House twice—for a conversation with the President at 11 a. m. and for tea at Mrs. Roosevelt's invitation at 5:30 p. m.—to the State Department, to the National Press Club, to the Lincoln Memorial, the Civilian Conservations Corps camp at Fort Hunt, and to Mount Vernon.

With his visit to the President, Eden added another world leader to the long gallery of policy-makers he knows. Eden, who charmed the gruff Stalin; whose charm infuriated Mussolini, and who found, in conversations with Hitler, that the two had faced each other and were simultaneously gassed, in trenches 100 yards apart at Ypres in 1916, spent a full 30 minutes with Mr. Roosevelt in what was believed to be a quick canvass of the international situation.

Refuses Comment

Neither would comment on their discussions. Eden said "it was all very pleasant," in a smiling noncommitment that the President echoed at his regular Tuesday afternoon press conference.

Preceded by his reputation as one of the ten best-dressed men in the world, by his Geneva nickname of "Lord Eyelash," and with a six-year record of being invariably photogenic, Eden was beset by feminine admirers from his Union Station arrival at 7:15 a. m.

He did not disappoint them, although his welcomes, repeated by feminine legions throughout the day, apparently flustered him. He waved back infrequently, in seeming shy response, to the clerks, young and old, in the State Depart-

Building Barriers at Lima

By the Associated Press.

Lima, Dec. 13.—Nations of the Western Hemisphere, spurred by what Secretary of State Cordell Hull called a "grave world situation," took first steps today to organize for peace in the New World and protection from the old.

Putting aside what Hull termed "excessive and short-sighted nationalism," the nations plunged into discussion of far-reaching projects before the Committee on Organization of Peace.

In a radio address tonight at the end of the day's sessions of the 21-nation Pan-American Conference, Hull declared American nations were "keenly aware of the threat to their principles and institutions which has arisen elsewhere in nations holding alien ideas which they seek to impose by force or extend by deception.

Hull Speaks

"Unless I mistake the prevailing attitude here," he added, "The American nations are determined to defend these institutions and principles of their own choice."

[The United States will propose adoption of a convention binding all 21 American republics to do everything possible to lower their tariff barriers, the United Press reported from Lima.

United States delegates said they had no desire, at this early stage, to agree on any plan advanced by other delegates for continental defense. Hull's intention, they said, was to refrain from taking a position until after full discussion of problems of defense in committee.

During the day a Brazilian proposal to deny alien minorities in

Patent Control Hinted in Quiz On Monopolies

King, Sumners Object To U. S. Questioning At Trust Inquiry

By Robert C. Albright.

A suggestion that Congress may consider regulation of corporate group patent methods yesterday followed testimony before the President's monopoly committee on "fencing in" competition with patent improvements in the $161,000,000 glass container industry.

Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney told reporters evidence indicated that "Congress, to which was delegated power to regulate interstate commerce, has by the patent laws delegated this power to groups to use as they choose."

Glass Officials Testify

"This testimony suggests the desirability of considering whether or not regulations should be developed to supervise group patenting," O'Mahoney said.

Officials of the Hartford-Empire Co., whose patented processes account for 67 per cent of the glass container output, and the Owens-Illinois Glass Co., largest single glass manufacturer controlling through patents another 29 per cent of the output, completed another day of testimony on intricate intercompany patent and management relationships.

S. F. Parham Is Witness

Over objections of William E. Levis, president of the Owens-Illinois Glass Co., a letter was read into the record detailing how Levis had resigned from the Loard of directors of a competing firm in 1935 following a blast in the Senate by Senator Borah.

Earlier, vigorous examination of S. F. Parham, patent counsel of the Hartford-Empire Co., whose basic patents, O'Mahoney said, assure

SEC Removes Stock Purchase Liability Rule

'Sub-Underwriters' Get Exemption to Speed Capital to Industry

In an epochal attempt to break the log jam hampering the flow of capital into industry, the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday exempted from civil liability under the 1933 securities act firms buying at bargain prices that part of security issues which underwriters are unable to sell.

The ruling, carefully hedged about to limit the exemption to buyers of securities for investment purposes, was announced by Chairman William O. Douglas at a special press conference.

Although refraining from expressing any opinion of his own, Douglas said the financial community felt the effect would be to facilitate the use of investment funds for plant expansion and equipment purchases.

"Whole Thing Tentative"

"The whole thing is tentative," he explained. "We are willing to give it a trial. Meanwhile, we will keep a careful watch to see how it works out and who enters into the business of acting as backstops for underwriters in this way."

He ventured the opinion that the ruling would forestall any amendment to the 1933 securities act designed to start a thaw in the capital market by relaxing the civil liability provisions.

In some quarters the commission's action is regarded as one of the most important rulings it has made since it was created in 1934.

The 1933 securities act contains a provision making underwriters of securities, as well as the issuing corporations, liable for civil damages for omissions of pertinent facts or misstatements in registration statements which must be filed

Kidnap Suspect In Jail at Time Of Girl's Seizure

Washington police announced last night that a suspect in the mysterious kidnaping of Mary Brown—identified by the 18-year-old Oxon Hill (Md.) girl as one of her assailants—was in prison at the time of the reported abduction.

Capt. Ira Keck, assistant chief of detectives, said local police have "completed their part of the investigation" and search for a second man partially identified by the girl will not be pursued.

Arthur W. Hepburn, superintendent of Prince Georges County police, however, said last night that Mary had not "positively" identified the youth's picture but merely "thought he looked like the man." He indicated Prince Georges authorities would continue their search for the kidnapers.

Capt. Keck said the "identified" man was sentenced to the workhouse at Occoquan last January on indecent assault charges and will not be free again until April, 1939. Another man whom Mary said "looked like" one of her abductors was recently released from jail, but Capt. Keck said no further efforts would be made to locate him.

Brief Case, Lost In N. Y., Greets Eden on Arrival

Anthony Eden experienced several hours of anxiety en route to Washington, over the loss of a dispatch-case, understood to contain important papers, members of his party revealed yesterday.

The case was first missed when the British statesman boarded a train in New York at 12:30 a. m. Still in evening clothes Mr. Eden went through the car waking members of his party who had retired and asking if anyone had the case.

Shortly after his arrival here the missing case was handed to him by a station porter. It had been found in his New York hotel and rushed here by a non-stop mail train.

Terrier to Face Charges Again of Biting Neighbors

Skippy, the lovable fox-bull terrier sentenced to death by court order—and then saved by the same judge—will be tried again tomorrow at 11 a. m. before Judge Edward Curran in Police Court.

The 3-year-old brown-and-white mutt, owned by Evart R. Rice, 3977 First street southwest, will be given another opportunity to prove (through his owner and friends) his innocence.

Judge Curran sentenced Skippy to death a month ago after neighbors testified he snapped at and bit them. He later granted a reprieve after veterinarians said the dog did not appear harmful.

Poundmaster Frank B. Parks said the little dog had been playing with the other little dogs at the pound and had made many friends.

Nazis, Rebuked, Shun Chamberlain Dinner

Prime Minister Protests at German Papers' Description of Baldwin as 'Guttersnipe' So Ambassador Avoids Banquet

By Frank R. Kelley.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Dec. 13.—Under direct orders from Berlin, the German Ambassador at London, Dr. Herbert von Dirksen, together with members of the embassy staff and a score of Nazi newspaper correspondents, tonight boycotted the golden jubilee dinner of the Foreign Press Association in London, after learning that Prime Minister Chamberlain, the principal speaker, intended to criticize the German press for its recent vituperative attack on Earl Baldwin.

50 Seats Left Vacant

Creating an incident without parallel in British diplomatic history, and one which may wreck Chamberlain's "appeasement" program, the Germans snubbed him by refusing to appear at the banquet at the last moment, leaving about 50 seats vacant.

Among the absentees was Reichsfeuhrer Hitler's special envoy, Godfried Aschman, head of the press department of the German Foreign Office, who had been sent to London to make a confidential report on Chamberlain's speech to Der Fuehrer.

"How Stupid," Says Chamberlain

"How stupid," Chamberlain remarked when he learned the reason for the absence of von Dirksen, who was to have occupied a place of honor at the speakers' table.

Then the prime minister went on to deliver his prepared speech, without altering the following sentence, which had irked the Nazis:

"I must deplore the present tone of the German press which in one case has not scrupled to pour out its vituperation upon the most respected of our statesmen, himself but lately prime minister of this country, and in few cases shows

Stars Spared By Smuggling Suspect's Plea

'Mystery Man' Denies Guilt in Charges Involving Burns

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 13.—Albert N. Chaperau, "mystery man" of a smuggling scandal that already has involved such personages as comedian George Burns and a judge's wife, intimated today that he had no present intention of talking about his supposed acquaintance with other entertainment stars.

Chaperau, heavy-faced and impassive, pleaded innocent to the newest indictments against him, despite the plea of guilty made yesterday by Burns, his co-defendant in one case. Chaperau had made the same plea to an earlier indictment which also named Mrs. Edgar Lauer, wife of a State supreme court justice.

Nothing official was said by Government investigators about Chaperau's decision to fight both cases, but privately they let it be understood his action had lessened the possibility of widening the official

Gang in Sing Sing Slays Man Spared by Error of Gunmen

By the Associated Press.

Ossining, N. Y., Dec. 13.—Gangland vengeance that reached even inside the walls of Sing Sing Prison wrote a sequel today to the "mistake murder" of John F. O'Hara, 26, New York financial investigator, slain by near-sighted underworld executioners last November 18.

KANE

Detectives said the intended target was Matthew J. Kane, 41, a former convict, who "knew too much."

Kane died today in the prison hospital from infection caused by a jagged fragment of knife-blade imbedded in his neck. He was stabbed in a mysterious assault last Sunday, authorities disclosed. Five convicts were placed in solitary confinement in connection with the case.

As Warden Lawes pressed an investigation, keepers said Kane "took the rap," in prison jargon, refusing to talk, even when he knew he was dying.

Twice marked for death, Kane escaped to live briefly through the error of his would-be slayers, but the act that saved his life also sent him back to prison to his doom.

He had been released from prison six hours before the O'Hara slaying, on his pledge to go directly to the home of his mother, in the same apartment building where O'Hara lived.

Instead, he violated his parole, and saved his life—for the time—

$60 Will Support H Family Until Father Can Earn Again

One way to make your own Christmas a happier one is to help someone less fortunate—through The Post's Neediest Families Fund. Today's "neediest family" has been investigated and recommended as deserving of your assistance by a member agency of the District of Columbia Council of Social Agencies. The story of that family is presented here.

At first, it was only on one or two days of the week that the small leather pouch Mr. H emptied on the kitchen table every night, as Mrs. H looked on, failed to meet the day's expenses of the family. Then it became more frequent.

The H Family
Needed $60

Mr. H is a taxi driver.

To meet the expenses of his family—to pay rent, purchase gasoline and oil, buy food and clothing for his wife, five small children and himself—Mr. H kept his cab on the streets from 10 to 20 hours a day.

No matter what the weather, nor how discouraging the day, Mr. H never returned home until he had enough cash to meet the family budget for that day—until several weeks ago.

At first, he would joke about those occasional days of low receipts. "Didn't make par on my course, today," he would say. But soon the stock of small jokes was exhausted.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Apparently Rex Tugwell still sees the President when he visits Washington, purely in a social way. Last time he dropped in at the White House he was in a mood of painful candor, after two visits to Mexico.

Tugwell ... he told FDR

"I've recently seen President Cardenas, of Mexico," he told FDR, "and he has a better grasp of world affairs than you do!"

* * * *

The President accepted this bouquet with his usual aplomb. But a few days later Tugwell received in New York a letter from the White House addressed to "Senor Rexfordio Tugwellio."

* * * *

President Roosevelt and Anthony Eden had one odd thing in common at their chat yesterday.

Eden's great-grandfather founded the town of Edenton—now called Denton—where FDR delivered his Maryland purge speech this fall.

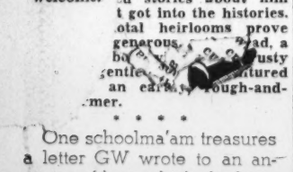
Amid the smoke of 50-cent cigars an interesting rumor is current in the Capital:

That soon after Christmas the American dollar may go under ether and submit to a minor operation, not too painful. The surgeons think nine stitches will be about right, and Washington scouts for big financiers think it will go to about 50 cents.

But people nearer the Treasury think all this is just Wall Street baloney.



"—a new name for Rexford"

Among the distinctions of Senor Najera, the Ambassador from Mexico, whose biography is the longest in the new "Who's Who in the Nation's Capital" (almost two pages of fine type, and five times as long as FDR's):

* * * *

He was a delegate to the Congress of Free Thinkers at Luxemberg in 1929, to the Dairy Congress in Copenhagen in 1931, and signed for Mexico a treaty for the protection of scientific and artistic institutes, in 1935, and of migratory birds and game mammals in 1937.

Incidentally, he has been a general, surgeon and poet; in short, a modern Leonardo da Vinci, and a member of the Mexican Society of Moral and Sanitary Prophylaxis.

Wowie! as the President says.

* * * *

Under "Hobby" in President Roosevelt's biography in the same "Who's Who" appears this sentence: "Naval interests . . . Ship models picked up in out-of-the-way places, re-rigged, re-fitted and exhibited as examples of personal ... craftsmanship and indication of the most accurate and detailed marine knowledge, awakened interest that started something ... in New York." ... more than a fad now, in ... on.

One schoolma'am treasures a letter GW wrote to an ancestor of hers which she hints broadly isn't quite fit for publication. It establishes beyond a doubt, says she, that he occasionally put in writing phrases which Abe Lincoln wouldn't have used in a smoking room. (Maybe he used the word "leg.") She declines to show it to anyone.

Most foreign diplomats in Washington agree that golf is fun, but a waste of time . . . When he gets het up against the New Dealers, Congressman Dies asserts, "I'll have 170 Republicans with me in the next session." . . . Girls say they found Eden less of a matinee idol type than his pictures; more of a he-man . . . After the extraordinarily affectionate reception Washington gave him, London may feel he'd do the British Empire more good in Washington than in London; he'd certainly do Chamberlain more good here.

Women Voters Hear Program For Children

Report Asks Training School Kept Where It Is Another Year

Recommendations for 20 additional workers for the Child Welfare Department, a superintendent of children's services, maintenance of the National Training School for Girls in its present location for another year, and subsidized foster homes for neglected children were presented to representatives of 20 civic organizations yesterday at a luncheon sponsored by the government and child welfare department of the League of Women Voters. The luncheon was held at the Y. W. C. A.

The recommendations were based on those made in the report of Miss Dorothy Henry, of Cleveland, who was brought here to conduct a preliminary survy of children's bureau, Child Welfare League of America, reports. Her recommendations will be followed soon with a final report by Jacob Kepecs, of Chicago.

Speakers yesterday included Miss Katharine F. Lenroot, director of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, who discussed recommendations in the Henry report regarding the National Training School; Elwood Street, director of the Department of Public Welfare, who read a report recommending a supervisor to co-ordinate the various child welfare services, and emphasizing the need for a good intake department; and Miss Patricia Morse, of the children's bureau of the Department of Public Welfare, who discussed the need for additional trained personnel in the home-finding service.

Mrs. Wagenet Speaks

Mrs. Gordon Wagenet, former child welfare chairman for the local league, the fourth speaker, discussed the receiving home. Mrs. Wagenet and members of her department made a survey last year the findings on which were used as the basis for the report.

Yesterday's meeting was the first of a series to organize informed support for recommendations which are expected to be made in the Kepecs report. Preliminary to the discussions by the four speakers, there was a skit, "Washington Goes A Budgeting," showing the confusion in the minds of the District Sub-Committee on Appropriations last year regarding the National Training School and the Receiving Home because of lack of a well-defined child welfare program. Mrs. Ralph Smith, Miss Mary Slattery, Mrs. Frederick Guthein, Mrs. Dean Snyder, Mrs. Arne Solem, Mrs. Louis Mayhew and Mrs. William T. Cameron took part.

Report Cited

Recommendation for 20 additional workers for the child welfare department of the Board of Public Welfare was based on the report of the Child Welfare League of America which revealed that at present the District of Columbia has almost twice as many children in institutions, both private and public, as have other cities of comparable size. This fact, the report said, resulted in a need for additional workers for home-finding, home-planning and placement of children.

The indorsement of the recommendation for a co-ordinator of children's services was "with the proviso that the superintendent chosen be of recognized competence in the child welfare field and that he shall have demonstrated his ability for leadership and organization."

Regarding the National Training School for Girls, the recommendation reads:

"In spite of the fact that dissatisfaction has continued for several years with the setup and administration of this institution, it is still thought wise not to make too many moves at one time. We believe that until the co-ordinator has had an opportunity to organize the child welfare work of the District and to integrate the new workers in the board of public welfare, the National Training School should be maintained at its present site for another year."

Foster Homes Urged

As to the receiving home the league recommended "that dependent and neglected children, awaiting final disposition of their cases, be placed in subsidized foster homes. We suggest that four such homes, each housing four children, be tried for the coming year; that for those children detained by court order and who cannot safely be returned to their homes, a building be erected near the juvenile court, with the intake to be controlled by the court.

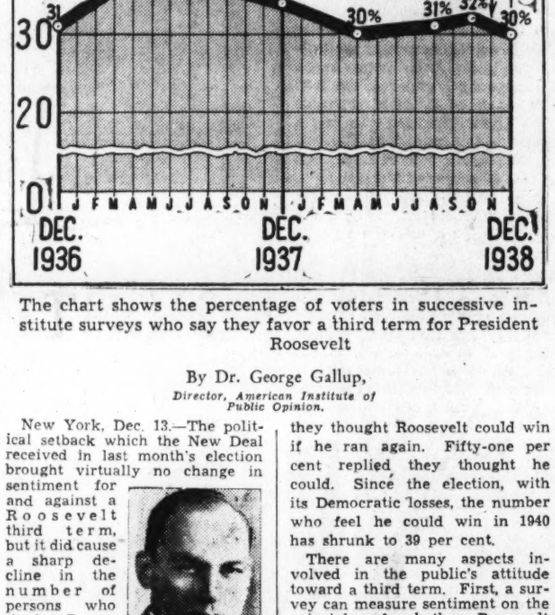
The Gallup Poll

Most Voters Continue to Oppose Third-Term For President Roosevelt, Survey Indicates



The chart shows the percentage of voters in successive institute surveys who say they favor a third term for President Roosevelt

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Dec. 13.—The political setback which the New Deal received in last month's election brought virtually no change in sentiment for and against a Roosevelt third term, but it did cause a sharp decline in the number of persons who think Roosevelt could win if he ran again in 1940.

GALLUP.

These facts are disclosed in a survey just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion. With New Dealers like Senator Guffey and Secretary Ickes leaning toward a third term for the President, and the Garner group opposing it, the institute took the issue to a cross-section of voters in every State.

It found that approximately one-third want to see Roosevelt run again, while two-thirds do not. The actual vote is:

Favor third term	30%
Oppose third term	70%

This sentiment is almost exactly the same as it was directly after the Presidential election two years ago, when the institute first began its index of third term sentiment. In the interim there have been only minor fluctuations, with the vote for a third term never going higher than 37 per cent.

Approximately one-half of all Democratic voters think Roosevelt should not run again according to the survey, and virtually all the Republicans.

	Favor 3d Term	Oppose
Democrats	49%	51%
Republicans	3	97

Prior to last month's election the institute asked voters whether they thought Roosevelt could win if he ran again. Fifty-one per cent replied they thought he could. Since the election, with its Democratic losses, the number who feel he could win in 1940 has shrunk to 39 per cent.

There are many aspects involved in the public's attitude toward a third term. First, a survey can measure sentiment on the principle of whether Roosevelt should run again. As noted above, about one-third favor the idea.

But there is another aspect. Assuming that the President succeeded in getting himself renominated by the Democratic Party, how many people would vote for him? In other words, are there voters who, while they do not advocate a third term, would cast their ballots for him in case he chose to ignore precedent?

The institute survey finds that 40 per cent of all voters say at this time that they would vote for Roosevelt if he ran again. Included in this number are many voters in the South, where voting the straight Democratic ticket has been a habit for many decades. Of all Democrats throughout the country reached in the survey, 64 per cent said they would vote for Roosevelt again, while 36 per cent said they would not.

This vote, by itself would not be enough to re-elect him in a straight two-party fight. Sentiment would have to change more in the next two years than it has in the last two years to put him in a position to win.

Another factor of importance in the public's attitude toward a third term would be the candidates involved. It is quite possible that if, in 1940, the voters find no candidate who in their estimation can match Roosevelt, many more may decide to ignore tradition and vote for him.

Vote Predicted On Wage-Hour Exemptions

Position of Worker Who Can Take Time Off Puzzling, Says Andrews

By the Associated Press.

Elmer F. Andrews, the wage-hour administrator, suggested yesterday that Congress might consider lifting overtime pay requirements from employes receiving a certain guaranteed salary.

The sort of employe he has in mind, he made clear, is the one getting $150 to $300 a month or more who is not an executive, or a professional worker, but can take a little time off for a fishing trip whenever he wishes without having his pay docked.

Just back from a cross-country trip, Andrews said at a press conference that some businessmen found overtime payments to this type of employe "the most difficult part of the act to understand."

The wage-hour administrator emphasized that he was not proposing amendment of the fair labor standards act to cover that situation. He said, however, that the way businessmen regard it "may lead to the suggestion that possibly that ought to be clarified by Congress."

The wage-hour administrator has been looking for a violation of the law under circumstances which might lead to a clear-cut test of the act's constitutionality. He indicated he had found suitable cases in South Carolina and New York, asserting he hoped to have material ready to bring court actions in those States within the next few days.

The administration has received about 3,300 complaints of violations, he said.

"Where an employer has made an honest mistake and promises to pay up promptly, we won't prosecute him," he said.

Tobacco Men To Fight AAA In High Court

Appeal From Ruling Of Georgia Court; New Laws to Be Weighed

By the Associated Press.

A group of Georgia and Florida tobacco growers, attacking constitutionality of marketing provisions of the 1938 agricultural adjustment act, appealed yesterday to the Supreme Court.

They appealed from a decision of a Georgia Federal court which had been hailed by Agriculture Department officials as a victory for the new farm program and affecting all its marketing provisions. The growers sought to enjoin warehousemen from paying over to the Government as a penalty one-half the purchase price of tobacco marketed in excess of quotas fixed under the act.

New Legislation Weighed

New Orleans, Dec. 13 (AP).—President Roosevelt called on farm leaders today to make "a diligent study to determine if additional legislation is needed" to meet the farm problem.

In a message to the convention of the Farm Bureau Federation, the Chief Executive expressed conviction the present farm act is "sound in principle" but suggested leaders consider if further legislation is necessary "to reduce price depressing surpluses, to expand domestic consumption of such commodities, and to provide a more effective farm program for 1940 and later years."

The President's communication was read to the delegates by Edward A. O'Neal, federation president, after O'Neal in his annual address had called the 1938 agriculture adjustment act and allied measures "the best all-around farm program we ever have had."

President's Christmas Tree Sales 'Good'

President Roosevelt revealed yesterday that he is doing all right with the Christmas tree business.

The President, who for several years has planted fir trees on his Hyde Park farm with an eye to the Christmas tree market, said he probably would sell about 1,000 trees this season. Asked if he was getting a "good price," he replied the price was about the same as last year.

President Likens D. C. Health Plan To Slot Machine

Reporters found President Roosevelt in a fun-making mood yesterday.

Asked at his press conference for comment on the prepaid medical service plan proposed by the District of Columbia Medical Association, he said he had not heard of the plan and, with a smile asked what it was—a sort of slot machine?

When one newsman asked about forthcoming appointments to high office, he replied that they were coming to a head.

That, he added, is what happens to a boil.

"Is it as painful as that?" the reporter asked.

Mr. Roosevelt laughed and said it very nearly was.

Boys Town Priest Guest Of Club Here

Father Flanagan Tells Need for Work With Homeless Youths

Father Flannagan, of Boys Town, Nebr., who has been friend and father to 5,000 abandoned and wayward boys, last night was "adopted" by more than 1,200 Washingtonians who gathered at the Willard Hotel reception given in his honor by the Calvert Club, an organization of Catholic business and professional men of Washington.

Appearing much as he was portrayed on the screen in the four-star film picturing life at Boys Town, Father Flanagan described himself as a "simple priest," asked his listeners "not to expect too much from a man who came in sixth in a big family" and then talked about boys.

In the group which overflowed the broad reception hall were members of both Houses of Congress, the Washington Diplomatic Corps, high Government officials, three university presidents and members of the clergy and laity.

Warning that the homeless and mistreated boy constitutes a danger not only to society, but to the government, Father Flanagan, in vigorous terms, called for a drastic reorganization of the American system of dealing with the delinquent boy —the reform school.

Boys Discussed

"Homeless and abandoned boys are the children who are in the first ranks of those swallowed up by the criminal element," he asserted. "Society expects in some miraculous manner these mistreated children to become good citizens. When some of them are bad, society is horrified.

"Everybody talks and prates about good citizenship. But if we had more men like our President and Jim Davis (Senator Davis), who are trying to do something in a national way for the forgotten boys, there would not be such a tremendous annual crime bill."

Striking a blow at foreign "isms," Father Flanagan said that unless "proper training is provided for delinquent boys, they undoubtedly will join the army of criminals which, with the great and growing army of communism and all other "isms" in America, will some day endanger this great republic of ours."

System Wrong

"Everyone knows the reform school system is wrong," Father Flanagan asserted. "Then why is there absolutely nothing done to change it? We have good men in these schools, but the system is wrong. You cannot help a boy by putting him behind bars.

"If we would save the delinquent boy from crime and communism, we must train him in religion and Americanism."

Explaining how 21 years ago he borrowed $90 from a friend to found a home for boys branded as "bad," Father Flanagan said that through kindliness and love he has proved his belief that there is "no such thing as a bad boy." He told of several examples—one in which a boy was a bank robber at 8 and another in which a boy became a murderer at 15—of boys branded as "no good" who have become boys of high character and ambition for the future.

Father Flanagan in a White House visit yesterday afternoon swapped compliments with President Roosevelt. James E. Colliflower told the audience when introducing the priest.

President Quoted

"The President complimented the work of Father Flanagan and told him with how much pleasure he viewed the film 'Boys Town' on Thanksgiving Day," Colliflower said. "Then Father Flanagan complimented the President on the success of the Civilian Conservation Corps camps."

President Roosevelt told the priest it was his wish "there could be 20 boys towns," Colliflower said. Father Flanagan was accompanied to the White House by Harry P. Summerville.

The program at the reception last night, which included selections by the Catholic University Glee Club and the Boys' Band from the Holy Comforter Parish Home, was rushed to permit Father Flanagan to entrain for Omaha, Nebr., at 11 p. m. The film "City of Little Men," in which the priest played the part he plays in real life, was shown during the program. A dinner at which the 100 members of the Calvert Club and Father Flanagan were present preceded the reception.

Incentive Tax Plan Assailed As Illusion by A. T. & T. Aide

Tells Senate Group Scheme Would Exaggerate Economic Cycles as 2 Others Defend Proposal

By the Associated Press.

Three of five businessmen who testified before a Senate Committee yesterday condemned incentive taxation as an "unsound" policy which might lead eventually to punitive taxation of business.

To this C. P. Cooper, vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., added a general criticism of industrial profit-sharing which, he said, "would tend to exaggerate the peaks and valleys of industrial booms and depressions."

Lothair Teetor, president of the Perfect Circle Co., piston ring manufacturers, of Hagerstown, Ind., and J. A. Gibson, vice president of the Simplex Wire & Cable Co., Cambridge, Mass., joined Cooper in criticizing the theory of giving Federal tax deductions to encourage companies to share profits with workers.

Advocate Profit-Sharing

They advocated, however, a sharing of profits to improve labor relations, as did C. S. Redding, vice president of Leeds & Nothrup, Philadelphia, and Frederick E. Macy, of the A. M. Collins Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia. Redding and Macy said they believed incentive taxation was practical.

Cooper told Senators Vandenberg (Republican) Michigan, and Herring (Democrat) Iowa, members of a special committee inquiring into the value of profit-sharing as a partial cure for economic ills, that he did not advocate the abolition of profit-sharing systems which have worked satisfactorily for both employes and employers in individual business.

"Our view is that, for industry as a whole, profit-sharing as a national policy would not be helpful," Cooper said.

Principle Held Unsound

"Similarly, it is our belief that the principle of incentive taxation is unsound as a national policy. All taxes are restrictive but they must be levied to provide for the expenses of government. We believe that to influence the course of business by either penalties or incentives, as far as taxes are concerned, is unwise."

Teetor was even more caustic in his criticism of incentive taxation, which he said, "is a curse to any nation that adopts it as a principle."

"The undistributed profits tax was our first great experiment in incentive taxation," Teetor continued, "and we can all see what a dismal failure it was . . .

"Regulation of business by law is bad enough, but regulation of business by taxation is insufferable in a supposedly free nation."

Bandit Writes Police Denying Valuation of Loot

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 13 (AP). A bandit leader invoked the aid of police and a robbery victim today to "square things" with his gang.

Q. S. Treagre, peanut store manager, had reported that $75 was taken from his shop by a gunman Saturday.

The robber, in a letter to Police Superintendent O'Malley, disputed the figure.

"I say he only lost $40.20," the letter stated. "I should know because I counted it. My boys are asking for a full split and I can't give them each $20 because I'll be losing dough on the job. Now I want you to see that he (Treagre) puts a retraction in the papers."

Treagre rechecked his loss; it was approximately $40.

18% Drop in Auto Deaths Puts D. C. 23d Among 48 States

National Average Was Decrease of 22% In Fatalities in Same Ten Months, Surety Firm States in Report

By Howard F. Wentworth.

With an 18 per cent reduction in traffic fatalities during the first ten months of this year, the District ranks twenty-third among the Nation's safest States, according to a tabulation announced last night by the Aetna Casualty & Surety Co.

From January to October, the report showed, Washington recorded 15 less accident deaths than during the same period for 1937. A total of 85 persons were killed in the ten-month period last year and 70 fatalities were reported this year.

The State of Pennsylvania leads the list with a decrease of 39 per cent. Maryland ranks sixth with a 29 per cent reduction and Virginia stands twentieth on the list with a 20 per cent drop.

22 Per Cent National Decrease

The country as a whole showed a 22 per cent reduction for the January-October tabulation, it was announced. Statistics, compiled from 36 States, show that traffic deaths this year totaled 14,643, as compared with 18,834 for the 10 months in 1937.

Four States reported increases, the highest being 14 per cent in South Dakota.

Meanwhile, the National Safety Council last night appealed to Washington police for "increased vigilance" during the coming Christmas holidays. Citing the District's fatality reduction, the council offered three suggestions:

Reassignment of police officers to protect traffic "hot spots" during the holiday rush.

Stationing of officers at night clubs and other public places to dissuade drinking drivers from taking the wheel.

Instruction of all policemen not to translate the spirit of Yuletide geniality into leniency toward erring drivers or pedestrians.

Stringency Urged

"In the final analysis," said a message from the council to local police, "hope of reducing the usual heavy year-end traffic toll rests largely on rigid enforcement of traffic laws. National experience has been that the stricter the enforcement the fewer the accidents."

Failure of Maryland authorities to post speed limit signs along Wisconsin avenue between the District Line and Bethesda last night drew fire from the Keystone Automobile Club. Repeated requests to have the signs erected have been ignored, according to George Keneipp, manager of the club.

The speed on the northbound side of Wisconsin avenue is 45 miles an hour, said Keneipp, but on the other side the limit is only 25 miles. Motorists generally are under the impression that the 45-mile limit prevails on both sides of the street, he said.

Inspection Not Required

"For some undivulged reason," Keneipp declared, "Maryland authorities have not seen fit to accede to requests for the posting of speed limit signs, but they apparently are carrying on a campaign of arrests against motorists who, quite unwittingly, are violating the speed limit which applies on the southbound side of the avenue."

At the same time last night, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer announced to District car owners that it will not be necessary to have cars inspected before 1939 license plates will be issued.

His announcdment was prompted by a long line of motorists who yesterday applied to the C street inspection station for safety inspection certificates, apparently under the impression they would not receive tags unless this was done.

The new compulsory inspection law, Van Duzer pointed out, will not become effective until some time in April, and all motorists will be notified. This year's tags, he emphasized, will be good until midnight, February 28.

Nazis Boycott Chamberlain's Critical Speech

Chamberlain

any sign of a desire to understand our point of view."

Chamberlain's audience of 500 diplomats, politicians and newspapermen cheered at this reference to Lord Baldwin, who was called a "guttersnipe" by the Lokal Anzeiger last Sunday for broadcasting an appeal for funds to aid persecuted German Jews.

Defends His Policy

The rest of Chamberlain's speech was a defense of his foreign policy and a reaffirmation of his determination to pursue "appeasement," coupled with a warning that henceforth Britain was only prepared to listen to reason and not to force in discussing the dictators' demands. He proclaimed no new departure in British foreign policy, but renewed his offer to conclude an international pact for the reduction or limitation of armaments.

With other foreign correspondents, German newspapermen were summoned to No. 10 Downing street at 3 o'clock this afternoon and were given advance copies of the speech which Chamberlain was to deliver at tonight's banquet.

Each copy was marked "strictly confidential: For release after delivery only. The text of the speech was shown to Von Dirksen at 6 o'clock. He immediately relayed the entire text to Berlin and after a hurried telephone conversation with officials in the German foreign office he received instructions to see that no German attended the dinner.

Hitler Himself Quoted

[The United Press quoted the London Daily Express as saying Reichsfuehrer Hitler personally ordered his representatives to boycott the dinner. The paper said Hitler objected to the passage "history teaches us that no form of government ever remains the same."—Editor's note.]

The following official announcement was issued later from the German embassy: "The German ambassador, members of the embassy staff and German journalists sincerely regret that because of certain sentences in the prime minister's speech, they should not attend the Foreign Press Association's dinner in London tonight."

The German decision was communicated to the Italian Embassy before the dinner began, but Count Dino Grandi, envoy of the other member country of the Rome-Berlin axis, ignored it.

Bad Etiquette, Say British

The refusal of the Germans to attend was regarded in Whitehall and Fleet street as a gross breach of etiquette. Exception was also taken to the fact that any hint of the terms of Chamberlain's speech was sent to Berlin before the prime minister rose to his feet.

Although Chamberlain is understood to be disposed to consider the incident closed, it is believed it will provoke a bitter press war between Britain and Germany.

Chamberlain proclaimed no new departure in British foreign policy, but went out of his way to slip in a reassuring message of support to France, following his blunt, legalistic statement yesterday that Britain was not formally obliged to defend France against Italy.

Good Word for United States

"In fact," Chamberlain said, "our relations with France are so close as to pass beyond mere legal obligations, since they are founded on identity of interests."

Chamberlain also put in a good word for the United States, hailing the Anglo-American trade agreement as "symbolic of the good relations happily existing between the United States and ourselves."

"Not many generations ago," Chamberlain recalled, "we were at war with the United States of America; today such a conflict has passed beyond the bounds of possibility. In my own lifetime we were within an ace of war with France; today such a catastrophe seems as remote as war with America.

Hopes for Peace

"If we have succeeded then in reducing the field of possible wars thus far," he went on, "is there any reason why we should not carry it further until we can attain such a general sense of security that all of us can lay aside our weapons and devote ourselves to the benefit of the human race?

"For my part, great as may be the obstacles, discouraging as may appear the outlook in certain respects, I believe it to be possible to attain our goal, provided we can keep our purpose firm, our courage undaunted and our faith untarnished."

Brushing aside the deterioration in Anglo-Saxon and French-Italian relations, Chamberlain said he was "astonished at the pessimism" which followed the Munich agreement. He insisted he had never imagined peace could be attained "without checks, disappointments and setbacks."

"Not Disheartened"

"I have had them all, perhaps in greater measure than I had anticipated, but I am neither disheartened nor deterred by these passing phases. . . . As long as I am where I am, I will never leave off trying.

"If you want peace you must seek and pursue it. You must find out what threatens it and you must take active, positive steps to remove that threat."

In pursuit of that aim the British government has been active and not unsuccessful, Chamberlain declared, citing the Anglo-Irish treaty, the Anglo-Italian agreement, the Munich agreement followed by the Anglo-German "no war declaration," the complementary French-German declaration and the Anglo-American trade pact.

As to the charge that he favored naziism or fascism, Chamberlain declared: ". . . the complete subordination of individual independence to something which is called the state but which really only means those who, for the time being, rule the state, would be insupportable . . ."

History teaches, he added, that no form of government ever remains the same. "It would seem to follow, therefore, that we should be careful not to shut ourselves off from contact with any country on account of a system which, in the course of time, may well undergo such modifications as to render it very different from what it is today."

Turning to Britain's rearmament program, Chamberlain argued it did not mean that British were a war-minded people.

"But while we hear so much talk about the advantages of force, while we see others accumulating force, and making no response to any suggestion for disarmanent, we are bound to take all steps necessary to fill up any deficiencies there may be in our defenses."

Press Resumes Attacks

Berlin (Wednesday), Dec. 14 (U.P.). The Nazi press today, commenting on Prime Minister Chamberlain's speech on foreign affairs last night, resumed its attack on Earl Baldwin.

"Whoever joins the ranks of agitators against the Third Reich must reckon with being struck back at," the Berliner Lokal Anzeiger said editorially. "This applies to former Premier Baldwin as much as to Eden and all the others."

No Berlin paper referred to the German boycott of Chamberlain's speech, although the official Nazi press agency, D. N. B., in a brief message from London, said the Germans did not attend. The message made no explanation.

Eden, Before Tomb of Washington, Finds Peace He Sought in Vain Over Europe

ment and White House, and the massed assemblies of women wherever he went.

Met by Mallet

Accompanied by V. A. L. Mallet, charge d'affaires of the British Embassy in the absence of Sir Ronald Lindsay, the Ambassador, Eden arrived at the State Department just before 10:30 a. m.

The two stood in the bare and somewhat grimly furnished old room where so many of the famous have stood, and there Eden, smoking a cigarette, conversed animatedly with Mallet, while clerks peered around the door.

At 10:40 the two were escorted across the hall to the office of Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles, and thence Welles took them across the street to the White House, entering just after the departure of Senator-elect Sheridan Dowey (Democrat), of California.

Press Club Jammed

Eden, who walks with a sidling amble, hands folded behind him, unless he is hurried, passed in the lobby the bulky, genial Senate majority leader, Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky.

From the White House Eden was driven in a big black embassy car to the National Press Building, where he had luncheon. As hundreds of unfortunately ticketless members groaned and shoved at the doors, Eden made a 15-minute off-the-record talk to a packed auditorium and received a noisy, standing ovation. He was introduced by the club president, Harold Brayman.

Sees Lincoln Shrine

As crowds gathered outside the building's doors, Eden appeared at 1:30 p. m., and entered another embassy car containing his pretty, peach-skinned wife, Beatrice, and stately Lady Lindsay, and Mallet. Under police escort, a six-car caravan formed for the sightseeing trip, which began at the Lincoln Memorial.

Even there, Eden found no peace, as the stillness that usually surrounds Daniel Chester French's huge statue of the seated Lincoln was shattered by the loud cries of guards denouncing photographers.

"Eden who?" snapped a guard at a photographer. "Well, if he's important, I'll call the lieutenant."

But the lieutenant was already rushing out roaring commands to the newsreel operators.

Leads Gettysburg Address

His lips moving as any tourist's, Eden read quietly through the Gettysburg Address fixed on the wall.

The caravan then sped down the Memorial Highway to Fort Hunt, where CCC Camp No. 2387 was prepared for inspection. Four platoons of the fresh-faced boys, drawn ready in parade formation, stood in military quiet as Eden, Camp Superintendent C. S. Watson, Camp Commander Capt. Blair Henderson and Assistant CCC Director James S. McEntee passed through the lines.

Rapidly the group walked through a dormitory, where shoes, bedding and duffle had been stowed for the inspection, past the recreation hall, where a radio was blaring "Flat-Foot Floogie with the Floy-Floy," and into the mess-hall, where photographers vainly implored Eden to pose beside an impressive display of freshly-baked berry pies—his only refusal to pose throughout the day.

Startled by CCC Numbers

Eden told McEntee he was deeply impressed with the camp's efficiency, and was startled when the latter told him there were 300,000 youths enrolled throughout the Nation. "You mean 30,000, don't you?" said Eden. He was perceptibly impressed when McEntee repeated the 300,000 figure.

At Mount Vernon the group went first to the Washington tomb, heads uncovered in the crisp air, and then sauntered up the brick walk to the house.

Here, in the large drawing room where the yellow carpet given Washington by Louis XVI of France is fading grey-white, Eden broke away from the guide to shake hands with William James Permar, 83-year-old assistant custodian, and owner of the longest white mustaches in all Virginia. Eden asked Permar how long he had been there, but Permar was ready for him. He answered without hesitation:

"Thirty-five years, 8 months, and 13 days today, and I feel fine, sir."

Eden said he was glad to hear it, and the group passed on.

Eden is slender, and stoops a little. He has clear blue eyes, a brown guards mustache, a faintly rabbity smile and a parliamentary adroitness that averts embarrassing questions without the unpleasantness of direct refusal.

Can Speak Persian

Member of Parliament from Warwick and Leamington, a safe Conservative seat, Eden was born June 12, 1897, the second of four brothers. All fought in the World War—the eldest being captured by the Germans, another killed in France, and the fourth, a midshipman, lost in the Battle of Jutland. Specializing at Christ Church, Oxford, in Oriental languages, in which he took a first, Eden can make an after-dinner speech in Persian, if necessary, and has been known to quote the Koran pointedly and at length in the original.

The son of a country baronet, Eden, after Eton, entered the Army, became its youngest adjutant; then the youngest brigade major in history (he owns a Military Cross), and later the youngest British foreign secretary in 84 years—the cabinet post he held from December, 1935, until Prime Minister Chamberlain dropped him as a liability to negotiations with the dictators.

Once an Art Critic

His wife is the daughter of Sir Gervase Beckett an influential banker and publisher of the Yorkshire Post, a powerful northern provincial organ for whom Eden once wrote art criticisms which he signed "A. E." They have two sturdy sons.

Last night he dined at the Embassy with Mallet. Today he will lunch with Assistant Secretary Welles at the latter's home at Oxon Hill, Md., and will continue sightseeing less formally. Thursday morning he will leave for Baltimore and Annapolis, to view the grave of his ancestor, and thence to New York City for a return to the red tin dispatch boxes of the post he may again hold—the foreign secretaryship of Great Britain.

investigation to include the testimony of various Hollywood stars.

During the day a Federal Grand Jury proceeded with its inquiry, while Colette D'Arville, an artist who has sung with the Metropolitan Opera Company, was interviewed by Assistant U. S. Attorney Joseph Delaney.

Miss D'Arville appeared voluntarily, and it was made clear she was not a suspect. The conversation was understood to have concerned the circumstance that she was a dinner guest of the Lauers when Rosa Weber, a German-born maid, was said by Chaperau to have created a scene because of table talk in denunciation of Reichsfuehrer Hitler.

Chaperau, who says he is of Jewish extraction, has described himself as victim of the malice which he says arose in the maid because of her discharge by the Lauers. An affidavit by the maid aided the government's investigation of smuggling.

The government's claim is that Burns and Mrs. Lauer connived with Chaperau to obtain foreign goods duty free. Chaperau was pictured as the actual carrier.

Burns asserted through counsel that he innocently bought the jewelry for whose possession he was indicted. He is the husband of Gracie Allen and is her "straight man" as well in a weekly Friday night radio program which features Miss Allen's studied inanities. It was indicated the program would continue without interruption.

Mrs. Lauer is expected to plead tomorrow to the indictment against her.

Moscow Paper Raps 'Intolerable Liberals' in Office

Moscow, Dec. 13 (AP).—An urgent demand for greater discipline among Soviet workers was voiced today by the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, which attacked younger executives for their "intolerable liberalism."

Some of these executives, themselves workers recently promoted, hesitate to proceed energetically against "idlers, floaters and disorganizers" of production, the paper said.

Many workers seem to forget, it added, that the "seven-hour day established in our country is the shortest working day in the world and should consist of 420 highly productive minutes."

Similar views were expressed in an article by two Stakhanovite (increased output) workers, who asserted that in the Stalin automobile factory in Moscow an average of 100 workers daily fail to appear for work, and others arrive half an hour late.

Reich Papers Hint At Move for Joint Panama Control

Special Cable to The Post.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—A thinly veiled hint that Germany, Italy and Japan, under the anti-Comintern pact, may raise the question of the internationalization of the Panama Canal, is contained in Nazi press comments on Italy's new drive for a change in the status of the Suez Canal.

The National Zeitung of Essen, organ of Marshal Goering, says bluntly, "In the future an international waterway will have to become the common property of those who are interested in its preservation."

Diplomatic Fete Of Medical Group Hears U. S. Aide

Through its new division of cultural reltaions, the State Department is striving to do essentially the same thing among nations which the International Medical Club of Washington is doing for doctors of various nationalities, that group was told yesterday by Richard Patti, acting chief of the division.

Two ambassadors and ten ministers attended the club's annual diplomatic luncheon, held at the Hotel Mayflower, at which Patti and Prof. Fritz Albert, of the University of Liege, were the principal speakers.

Dr. Albert, a professor of surgery, has just completed a Coast-to-Coast tour of American medical centers. He voiced high praise of their methods.

Dr. Thomas Cajigas, president, presided. The Belgian Ambassador, Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, was the ranking guest. Ambassador Fernando de los Rios of Spain also attended.

The Ministers present were Recinos of Guatemala, de Bianchi of Portugal, Castro of El Salvador, Abhibal Rajamaitri of Siam, Zadeikis of Lithuania, Bilmanis of Latvia, Boyd of Panama, DeBayle of Nicaragua, Irimescu of Rumania and Brennan of Ireland.

Czech Pledges Co-operation To Germany

Stress on Nationalism, Realism to Be Keynote Of Beran's Policy

By the Associated Press.

Prague, Dec. 13.—Premier Beran told the Czecho-Slovak Parliament today the republic's relations with Germany would be based on friendship and that nationalism instead of internationalism must determine her future course.

He appealed to Germany, however, to understand "the psychological effects" of the loss of territory "which we have to overcome."

He declared that "the Munich conference necessitated a basic change in the methods and program of Czech policy."

Denounces Illusions

Of international relations he said Czecho-Slovakia "henceforth will not chase after illusions, but foreign policy will be based on facts, economical and social, without however sacrificing indisputable rights or renouncing the right to defend national interests."

Beran said the Jewish problem would be solved in such a way that "our standing toward Jews who have been living a long time in our territory and who maintain a positive attitude toward the necessities of the state and its nationalities will not be inimical."

Semi-Dictatorship Rumored

Official circles reported the government was planning to assume semi-dictatorial powers.

Two bills were drawn, one giving the president and government far-reaching authority, including the power to make constitutional changes by decree.

The second measure would provide for appointment of auxiliary Slovak "governmental delegates" to those ministries which operate for the whole republic-foreign affairs, finance and defense—and are headed by Czech ministers.

Lithuania Quells Riots, Jails Nine

Reich Demands Naming Of Fascists Head to Regime, Is Report

By the Associated Press.

Kovno, Lithuania, Dec. 13.—Nine persons were arrested today as the Lithuanian government moved energetically against opposition elements accused of fomenting disorders following the Nazi victory in Memel diet elections Sunday.

While anti-Semitism, spreading into Lithuania from the Memel territory, was being linked with anti-government demonstrations, it was rumored Germany was pressing for the inclusion of former Premier Augustine Waldemaras, once leader of the Fascist "Iron Wolf" organization, in the government.

A rightist bloc, which now is opposing the government, advocates a "return to democracy" through abolition of the present semidictatorship and a settlement of relations with the Vatican on terms acceptable to Catholics.

One of those arrested today was a leader of the Young Catholics Organization.

A conference of Baltic foreign ministers, scheduled to open December 19, was postponed until mid-January because of the Lithuanian developments.

Striking students were forbidden to meet by university authorities, turned their anger into slogans shouted against Jews and the government.

Jo Davidson's Spanish Busts, Wrought in War, Coming Here

Busts of Spaniards completed under fire on the Spanish war front by Joe Davidson, American sculptor who designed the Will Rogers memorial in Oklahoma, will be brought to Washington early next month for a two-week display, Jacques Davidson, son of the sculptor, said here yesterday.

The elder Davidson, famous for his busts of world-renowned characters, is somewhat of a globe-trotter—a sideline the son is likewise developing in directing the displays of his father's works.

The busts to be displayed here will be taken throughout the Nation on a tour for the benefit of the Spanish children's milk fund, under direction of the younger Davidson. The Washington show will open January 3 and close January 16.

Visited Spain in July

"This work is a result of my father's visit to Spain in July," Davidson said. Since that visit, the sculptor has spent most of his time in the war-torn republic to work in behalf of war sufferers, putting aside numerous pleas that he return to America to continue his art.

When the Will Rogers Memorial was unveiled recently the sculptor made a transoceanic trip to New York, a quick trip to Clarence, Okla., home of the humorist, and hastened back to Spain, where he remained one day and then sailed to Paris. He is still there working on a statue of Walt Whitman, the "father of free verse," for exhibition at the 1939 World's Fair in New York City.

Officials Subjects

The display to be shown here includes a bust of Maj. Milton Wolff, a 23-year-old Brooklyn, N. Y., youth who commanded the Abraham Lincoln Brigade of American Volunteers in the Spanish War up to its recent dissolution. This, along with two other busts, was made during heavy fighting at the front, the younger Davidson said.

Ten heads and 19 drawings of Spanish military and government officials are included in the display.

Davidson, who has modeled out of clay the heads of President Roosevelt, President Wilson, President Hoover, Benito Mussolini, Mahatma Ghandi and numerous other world figures, "works anywhere," his son said. While molding the bust of Ghandi in England the sculptor lay on the floor to work in order to get detail of features of the Mahatma.

The bust Davidson wrought of the late John D. Rockefeller was listed in his will as a $7,000 asset.

Nazis Say Jewry Rules in America

Berlin, Dec. 13 (U.P.).—Chancellor Adolf Hitler's own newspaper, the Voelkischer Beobachter, in a front-page editorial three columns long, yesterday attacked "Jewish rule in the United States," which, it said, speaks to the Nation through "fireside talks from Washington."

The editorial, signed by the pen name "Ipila," did not mention President Roosevelt by name. It predicted the people of the United States one day would rise against Jewry and in this connection said:

"Revenge will not be lacking. American citizens and farmers who have been plundered and enslaved and made fools of by their masters together will break Judea's chains. That will not be without hardships or without great sacrifices. Mothers and wives will cry through the land their hate of Judea, which seeks through sacrifices of the best American blood on the battlefields of Europe to erect tyranny accordingly. One day Americans too will follow."

Refugees Fear World Won't Take 'Coupons'

Believe They Will Get Only 50% of Value; Cash Export Forbidden

By the United Press.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—A new decree tightening restrictions on removal of Jewish property from Germany tonight led to the belief among foreign bankers that the Reich's 700,000 Jews can expect scant relief under a Nazi plan to encourage mass migration by means of "trade coupons."

Financial experts, describing the plight of the Jews as being as desperate as ever, said Germany apparently refuses to pay anything for ridding herself of them and, to the contrary, seeks to profit from the "purge" in the form of increased exports.

The new decree, issued by Minister of Economics Funk to "protect" the flight of foreign exchange, forbade German Jews and Jews without nationality to carry abroad anything not needed for personal use after January 1.

New Allow 10 Marks

Jews, who along with Aryans now are prohibited from taking more than 10 marks ($4) out of the Reich without special permission, must obtain permits to carry out all possessions or gifts.

The "special permission" required for Jews attempting to salvage any of their wealth or belongings and take them abroad presumably would apply to the Reich's proposed scheme to rid itself of all Jews within two years by letting them carry out perhaps 15 per cent of their property in the form of the "trade coupons."

These coupons, to be cashed abroad, must be used solely for the purchase of "supplementary" German exports.

Since the "trade coupons," representing Jewish wealth held in trusteeship in Germany for the Jewish emigrants, must be used for "supplementary" exports, they probably would find a limited market abroad.

Cash for Fine Sought

As result, it was said, the Jews might be forced to take a discount of at least 50 per cent in liquidating the coupons and might be lucky if they landed in their new homes abroad with 4 or 5 per cent of their original wealth.

Thousands of Jews frantically were seeking cash to meet the first installment of the $400,000,000 collective "fine" imposed upon German Jewry for the assassination in Paris of Ernst vom Roth by a young Polish Jew. The first installment, amounting to $100,000,000, is due Thursday.

Douglas Miller, American commercial attache, left today on his way to Washington in response to a recall that followed the departure of United States Ambassador Wilson last month.

38% Bigger Budget

Paris, Dec. 13 (AP).—Premier Daladier speeded toward final action today a $2,460,406,000 budget bill providing a 36 per cent increase in expenditures next year. Half of the increase would go for armaments.

The premier obtained approval of the Chamber of Deputies for applying emergency procedure under which the chamber will vote the budget for each ministry instead of by more detailed chapters.

Lima Seeks New World Peace Which Europe Can't Disrupt

Lima

Latin America any special minority rights, such as Sudeten Germans demanded of Czecho-Slovakia, was referred to the committee on international law. Brazil has large German and Italian minorities.

Mexico proposed a declaration against aerial bombardments in wartime, and the United States delegation led in preparation of economic proposals which would link the Americas by increased trade.

The Argentine delegation, meanwhile, was attempting to co-ordinate three plans for a declaration calling for an end to the Spanish civil war. The plans were prepared by three Argentine delegates—one a Rightist, one a Leftist, and the third of the political center.

Former Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, probably will make the closing address before the conference for the United States delegation, several delegates said. Hull already has mentioned such a probability. The only difficulty was Landon's desire to fly back to the United States in time to be home for Christmas.

If the conference ends December 20, as some believe, he will have time to make the address, but if it lasts until December 23, he might have to leave before the closing date.

The United States was absolved of imperialism by Juan J. Remos, Cuban secretary of state, today in a speech at the conference.

Remos called the United States a "leader" in respecting the sovereignty of Western Hemisphere states.

His address was just ten years after the Pan-American Conference was held at Havana, Cuba, where there were vigorous attacks on the United States' "dollar diplomacy."

"The Cuban delegation proclaims with satisfaction," he said, "the noble friendship of a great neighboring people, our friends, which at a distance of a few miles from the Cuban coast is giving the most emphatic denial to the world of its imperialism, observing the most scrupulous respect for our institutions and a most loyal practice of good neighbor."

In his radio address, Hull said his talks with delegates of other powers led him to believe that "there exists among us a measure of moral and spiritual unity far greater than ever before."

He traced the improving inter-American relations, the settling of the Gran Chaco war, and the consultations and other agreements reached at Buenos Aires in 1936. He continued:

"Now at this meeting at Lima we have undertaken to discuss implementation of agreements already reached and to provide further effective measures for consultation and co-operation in all matters of common concern.

"The advancement in our relations which I have sketched rest upon a common acceptance of certain fundamental principles for which American nations fought in their struggles for independence. When, as today, in other parts of the world these fundamental principles were being subordinated to other philosophies or purposes, the American nations understand anew their precious and life-giving quality. For the American peoples have chosen a representative government as the basis for their political philosophy and practice. They hold maintenance of and respect for human rights and individual liberties essential to progress of mankind and worthy civilization. They have developed an inner spirit of tolerance of individual-toward-individual and group-toward-group, and they know the spirit gives quality to their life and society.

"They are keenly aware of the threat to these principles and institutions, which has arisen elsewhere in nations holding alien ideas, which they seek to impose by force or extend by deception. Unless I mistake the prevailing attitude here, the American nations are determined to defend these institutions and principles of their own choice.

"I am absolutely convinced that every one of the American republics desires to live in peace and work in friendly co-operation with every other nation in the world.

"We do not seek to impose our form of government or our institutions upon other peoples. We do believe international relations can be conducted on the basis of peace and international law and order, an appreciation of each other's problems, and recognition that the welfare of peoples is the primary concern of governments.

"In these beliefs and efforts we remain conscious of the ever-increasing interdependence of all nations. Hence we do not seek a merely regional solution alone, but one broad enough to take full account of those world conditions and problems which materially affect regional welfare.

"We are establishing among ourselves a system of relationships which is in accord with our institutions and principles. We believe the principal bases of this system are applicable to relationships among all nations, and we eagerly welcome the co-operation of each and every country in the world in their support.

"At later opportunities we will report in clearer detail on specific matters under discussion at our meetings. For tonight let me conclude simply, expressing again my confidence that here at Lima we will carry further forward the work of the past.

"To that end we must have the continued and increasing support of our peoples, for it is only with their support that our freedom, our individual liberty, and the security of our countries and our institutions can be safeguarded against the possible threat of armed force, anarchy and intolerance."

Additional Loans Studied

By the Associated Press.

A $10,000,000 loan to expand United States-owned communication facilities in South America gave impetus last night to the Administration's program to promote solidarity in the Western Hemisphere.

The loan, to which New York banks will add another $5,000,000, was announced by the Export-Import Bank. It will go to the International Telephone & Telegraph Corporation.

The loan was the largest ever made by the bank, which is a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It brought to approximately $20,000,000 the amount of money the bank now has invested in Latin American business ventures.

The loan followed by only 24 hours a disclosure by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau that he was studying the possibility of direct loans from the Treasury to the Latin American republics for trade promotion.

British to Aid France in Any African War

English Envoy Pledges Military and Moral Support, French Say

By the United Press.

Paris, Dec. 13.—The foreign office spokesman tonight announced that Great Britain has pledged to give both military and moral support to France if war should result from Italy's still unofficial territorial demands in the Mediterranean and North Africa.

The foreign office announcement was made shortly after Foreign Minister Bonnet conferred with British Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps regarding Prime Minister Chamberlain's statement in the British House of Commons Monday. That Britain has no treaty obligations to go to France's aid in event of an attack by Italy.

No Alliance Needed

Phipps was understood to have assured Bonnet that any Italian attempt to upset the "status quo" in the Mediterranean by acquiring Tunisia would slice the life-line of the British Empire.

Therefore, he said, Britain is just as determined as France to resist any Mediterranean aggression by Italy and this involves a promise of military as well as moral support.

British sources said Phipps explained that Franco-British interests were so inter-dependent that there was no need of a formal agreement covering all eventualities.

To Cut Canal Tolls

In a move expected to alleviate somewhat the Italo-French tension, the French-controlled Suez Canal Co. is preparing to reduce its canal tolls from 6 British shillings ($1.50) a ton to 5 shillings 9 pence ($1.43).

It was explained the reduction had "nothing whatever to do" with the Italian demands. The cost of Suez Canal passage has been a sore point with Italy, particularly since the Ethiopian War.

Minister Wounds Political Foe

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 13 (AP).—A Cuban cabinet member today hacked out satisfaction for his offended honor with a military saber, in a "secret" duel with Aurelio Alvarez, leader of the Revolutionary Political Party.

Aurelio Fernandez Concheso, former minister to Berlin and now secretary of education in President Bru's cabinet, challenged Alvarez for derogatory public utterances, and drew first blood, gashing his opponent's sword arm.

That should have ended the whole affair with handshakes and a "Cuba Libre" cup of rum and lime juice. But seconds said Alvarez refused reconciliation and made no promises concerning future use of his favorite weapon—the pen.

Cuban law forbids duels, providing sentences of one to two months for all involved. The law has rarely been applied.

Bombed Valencia Rocked by Quakes

Valencia, Dec. 13. (AP).—This former provisional capital of government Spain, long used to insurgent air raids, was rocked last night by two earthquakes.

The first shock lasted 3 seconds and the second, of greater intensity, continued for 2 seconds. The walls of several buildings collapsed in the suburbs but no casualties were reported.

Mexico Reported Making New Deal To Sell Japan Oil

Mexico City, Dec. 13 (U.P.).—A deal by the Mexican government to sell oil to Japan was reported under way today less than a week after details of a barter arrangement with Germany were published.

The newspaper La Prensa said it understood Japan has agreed to buy a considerable quantity of oil, expropriated last March from American and other foreign companies, provided the Mexican government can arrange to deliver the shipment at some Pacific port.

Neither the amount of the deal nor the price was revealed.

Originally the Mexican government had announced it would not sell the seized oil to any but democratic states.

Alderman Tells How 'The Gimp' Wounded Him

Shows Bullet Hole; Synder's Daughter Aids Ruth Etting

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Dec. 13. — Myrl Alderman, 30-year-old accompanist for Ruth Etting, radio singer, unbuttoned his shirt in court today and showed a jury the bullet wound he said her former husband, Martin Snyder, inflicted last October 15.

Alderman said Snyder accosted him just as he finished his work at the N. B. C. Studios and said he wanted to have a talk about Miss Etting.

"He said he had reports Miss Etting and I were married," Alderman testified. "I told him that wasn't rue."

Alderman said Snyder demanded that he be taken to see Miss Etting, took a pistol from his pocket, and told him: "If you make a move it will be the last you'll ever make."

Alderman said he drove to his home, got out and that Snyder marched behind him into Alderman's kitchen.

Tells of Firing at Father

Alderman's story of the argument and the shooting followed closely those of Miss Etting and Snyder's 21-year-old daughter, Edith, who said she fired at her father after he shot Alderman.

Miss Snyder described the scene in Alderman's home the night of October 15, saying her father told her, Alderman and Miss Etting, "this is going to be the end of all of you." She said Alderman was shot in the stomach as he started to plead with her father.

Miss Snyder followed Miss Etting on the stand. The former radio headliner admitted she accepted a diamond and platinum bracelet from Snyder when he arrived here last July from New York. Six months before, she claims, Snyder telephoned her he was "coming out there and kill you."

Jersey City Wins Appeal in CIO Case

Philadelphia, Dec. 13 (AP).—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals today lifted a district court injunction that restrained Jersey City, N. J., police from deporting labor pickets.

The court said there was no necessity for the court to pass on whether the union members' rights were violated, because one of two firms involved had gone into bankruptcy and the other had signed a contract with the workers.

A similar principle is involved in the appeal of Mayor Hague of Jersey City, for the circuit court to supersede the district court which enjoined Jersey City police from denying the C. I. O. meeting rights equal to those of other organizations.

Mere $125 Bid Defers Earl Carroll Auction

New York, Dec. 13 (AP).—An auction of Earl Carroll's rights to 16 theatrical productions, 16 songs and his stock in ten corporations was postponed today until January 9 because the highest bid was $125—hardly more than the price of a "pair on the aisle" on an opening night in the producer's salad days.

Carroll went into bankruptcy more than a year ago. Among the songs on the block were such old favorites as "All of You" and "Once in a Lifetime."

X-Ray Machine Stolen As Beer Fells Doctor

Given a sleeping powder in a glass of beer at a nearby Virginia tavern, Dr. Jasper E. Morgan, of Durham, N. C., was robbed of $10 by a taxicab driver who also pilfered Dr. Morgan's locker at the Greyhound Bus Terminal of a $900 X-ray machine.

Dr. Morgan said he hired a taxicab at Fourteenth and H streets northwest, Monday night and asked to go to a place where he could get a glass of beer. He said he was doped and his money, overcoat and locker key taken from him.

U. S. Rests Case After 'Missing Witness' Talks

Plot

E. Martino is defending the Silvermans, roved up and down Speicher's story of meetings in hotel rooms and secret telephone conferences between New York and Washington.

Silverman was only trying to help him get vital facts to the House committee, Speicher testified under Leahy's gentle interrogation. About coming back to Washington himself, Speicher said Silverman told "me I would not have a chance at that because I would be crucified."

Speicher stayed away, he said, because the G. M. C. agents were blaming him for some changes in specifications for trucks. The data he was relaying to the committee was about G. M. C., he said.

"At any time," asked Leahy, "was there an understanding between you and Joseph Silverman that he was to pay you money to stay away?"

"I told Joe Silverman," replied Speicher, "that it cost money to get that information from Detroit, because Mr. Haig had done so much rot out there in getting money from his company—of thousands of dollars—which he was supposed to have paid Mr. Woodring, Mr. Dern, Mr. MacArthur—that Mr. Tulley knew about it—from information down here—and that is a matter of record. It was proved he embezzled that money from the Chevrolet Motor Co. but nothing was ever done about it."

[Secretary of War Woodring was at that time Assistant Secretary under Secretary Dern and Gen. Douglas MacArthur was chief of staff of the Army.—Editor's note.]

William S. Knudsen, G. M. C. president, said in Detroit last night that Speicher's charge wasn't true and that the best evidence of this was that Haig was still with G. M. C.

Speicher said Haig sold Army officers cars at a 24 per cent discount, too.

The missing witness said he didn't think his own boss, W. S. Sweet, president of the Eastern Bec Inner Tube Co., wanted him to testify any more than Silverman did. But while he was in New York going around under the name of Capt. John Smith, just the same he was "trying the best I knew how to give up to the House committee," he said. He got hold of Chairman Rogers, of the sub-committee, and was told he would get a letter when to appear, he said. He called up a Mr. Hogan, a committee clerk, and could get no information, he said.

Meanwhile, he stayed in New York, for which, he conceded, he had grave personal reasons. About these Leahy asked the next Government witness, Harold E. Schnuer, the New York lawyer whom Speicher called "Dr. O'Brien," sent to pick up the little blue envelopes with the big money in them.

"You know, don't you," said Leahy, "why Speicher left Washington?"

"Yes," said Schnuer.

"I'm not going to ask you what it was, but it was something that concerned him personally, wasn't it?"

"Yes, it was personal."

"Those reasons went back a number of years, didn't they?" Lynch broke in.

"Yes," said Schnuer.

Leahy never did ask what the reason was, so the audience didn't find out why Speicher really did leave Washington.

with the commission before a security issue can be publicly sold.

The effect of the commission's action is to set up a special class of "sub-underwriters," who will not be classed as underwriters and, therefore, cannot be sued by security purchasers if the registration statement covering the security issue happens to be classed as faulty.

Douglas said the commission had been studying the capital market problem for a long time. The ruling, he said, is regarded as a "fool-proof" solution of the effort to straighten out the "bottleneck" in the Nation's security distribution machinery—the means whereby capital funds are made available to industry.

"I don't think the plan has any inherent bugs in it," he said.

Investment bankers and underwriters feel that, by setting up a category of subunderwriters exempt from civil liabili y, the machinery for selling common stocks and second grade bonds, which has been gummed up so long, will be set in motion.

Sale of common stocks is a means of obtaining money for new enterprise and business ventures. The SEC action, it is said conceivably may aid in helping medium-sized or smaller corporations to obtain needed capital funds.

At the time the act was under consideration by Congress, the charge was made that persons would be held liable who could not possibly know whether registration statements were correct in every detail.

Douglas said the ruling would apply to insurance companies and investment trusts and possibly to certain other companies and individuals.

He emphasized that it was not intended that underwriters of security dealers should use the exemption as a device to escape civil liability. He indicated, in fact, that the exemption would not apply to security distributors, since the assumption would be that any securities acquired by them were bought for resale.

Pittman Plans Bill for U. S. Counter-Spies

Spy

agent has to know his people. But neither can the United States Government wait until the last moment to combat such organizations. It's time we got busy."

To Confer on Bill

Senator Pittman said he had not worked out the bill he proposes to introduce or have introduced when Congress meets. First, he said, he wants to hold a series of conferences with Government officials close to the problem.

Last summer Pittman suggested that a special group of G-men in the Federal Bureau of Investigation be assigned to counter-espionage work. Yesterday, however, he expressed the opinion that such activities ought to be under the State Department.

The FBI, Senator Pittman said, is primarily concerned with enforcing domestic statutes, the Secret Service is primarily engaged in running down counterfeiters, and the Customs Bureau in collecting revenue and apprehending smugglers. For that reason he thought that the spy problem ought to be intrusted to the State Department, working in conjunction wtih the other agencies and the Army and Navy intelligence units.

Would Work Abroad Also

The work, Senator Pittman said, would be of a peculiar type, far removed from ordinary police work, and consequently would call for a certain type of operative. Inevitably, he said, it would require some investigation abroad, just as the smuggling problem does.

Senator Pittman said the bill he introduced in the last Congress to require every agent of a foreign country to register with the State Department might be regarded as a first step in combating potential directors of sabotage.

Denies U. S. "Hysteria"

Apropos of those who are charging that America is getting "hysterical" on the question of spies and national defense, Senator Pittman pointed out that the world today is an abnormal and explosive world and seemingly getting worse.

"We have been inclined to give other nations credit for having the same ideas about morality that we have," he said. "By this time, we ought to know better. There are nations in the world today that are determined to let nothing stop them from achieving their goals. Morality, mercy, conscience mean nothing to them. Under those circumstances, for a nation to fail to prepare against its own possible destruction is nothing short of criminal."

Hunter, 18, Badly Hurt

New Laws Hinted in Glass Patent Inquiry; Sumners, King Object to U. S. Questioning

Monopoly

domination of the container industry until 1954, precipitated the first sharp committee clash.

Parham had denied Hartford-Empire patents covered a "stream feeding" process still in use.

"Is that what you are going to say when you sue these people sometime?" asked Hugh Cox, Justice Department attorney.

"Why do you assume that I am going to sue those people?" said Parham.

"You sue everyone sooner or later, don't you?" Cox retorted.

Sumners, King Object

Representative Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, objected to the line of questioning, and Senator King (Democrat), of Utah backed Sumners' stand.

"I think the witness is being reluctant," said Cox. "I think if we are called upon to demonstrate the litigation policy of this company we can show they have sued, or threatened to sue, almost everybody."

"How is that to guide us in our determination of policy," asked Sumners.

"I think it has a great deal to do with it," put in Senator Borah.

"I would like to point out," said Cox, "that one of the most effective ways of using a patent to achieve a position of dominance in an industry, quite apart from the rights which the patent gives you as a patent, is by litigation. If you have the resources to engage in litigation you can eventually wear out your competitors, or so weaken them that their competitive position is one where they are of little or no account."

Counsel for the witness protested that "we sued where our patents were being infringed, and no other place" and asked permission for Parham "to go into the various suits."

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold objected, insisting Cox be allowed to "present our case."

"It seems to me that Mr. Cox is quite right," said Arnold. "The witness has seemed somewhat reluctant."

O'Mahoney ended the controversy by asking committeemen to "stop fencing."

Cox later put on the stand E. W. McAllister, Pittsburgh patent attorney, who testified to the "broad" and basic character of patents taken out by Hartford-Empire in 1928 and again in 1937, thereby, Cox said, extending its patent controls another 17 years.

Queried by Borah on the patent "fencing in" policy recommended by a former Hartford-Empire official, McAllister said it was a common practice and could operate two ways—to safeguard a company's own invention by patented improvements, and to patent improvements on a competitor's invention to prevent his expansion.

Levis Begins, Is Halted

"I think every patent attorney in the country at one time or another has been guilty of trying to do one thing or the other," said the Pittsburgh attorney. "But I think it would be impossible. A man must be an optimist to think that he could. You never can tell what will be invented. All you can do is try to out-invent the other fellow."

Levis, of Owens-Illinois, had hardly started his testimony before hearings adjourned for the day. Cox developed testimony that the "Levis group," largely comprising one family, owned interest in Hazel-Atlas Glass Co. and other "competitors," and that Levis had served on the board of Hazel-Atlas.

The witness objected to inclusion in the record of a letter written to his "Uncle Harry" because it was a "personal matter." He said the committee had taken 8,000 more letters from his business files that were more pertinent.

Cites 'Anonymous' Letter

The letter said in part:

"Because of the recent publicity given Owens-Illinois and our investment in Hazel-Atlas in a letter read into the Congressional Record of March 8 by Mr. Borah, I advised Mr. McNash that it would probably be desirable for me to resign as a member of their board at either their April meeting or their July meeting, and we discussed the advisability of having Mr. George Quay, secretary of the company, elected in my place, with the understanding that he would be representing us and that I would receive through him the same type of information I now receive as a director."

Levis said an "anonymous" party had written Borah, and he also resigned from an NRA code authority as result of the incident.

"If anonymous letters were being written, and we couldn't find out who was writing them, we thought we had better pull in our shell," said Levis.

Textile Union Chief Quits Ranks of C.I.O.

Second Major Loss in Membership May Face Lewis

By the Associated Press.

Francis J. Gorman, president of the United Textile Workers, broke definitely with the C. I. O. yesterday and proposed that a convention be called as soon as possible to determine the union's future policy on affiliation.

In a letter to 700 locals, claiming 100,000 members, Gorman said he had become a member of the A. F. L., criticized the policies of the C. I. O.'s Textile Workers Organizing Committee and asserted that all ties with the C. I. O. had been severed by a Rhode Island court decision.

Should the union desert C. I. O. ranks for the A. F. L., it would be the second major defection from John L. Lewis' industrial union organization. The International Ladies Garment Workers, representing 250,000 members, refused last month to join the C. I. O.'s permanent organization.

Sidney Hillman, chairman of the T. W. O. C., asserted he was not disturbed by Gorman's action. He said that authority to call a convention was vested in the union's executive board "whose members are now connected with the T. W. O. C."

Hillman added that Gorman was on the T. W. O. C. payroll and a member of the advisory committee of that C. I. O. affiliate. "If he wants to join the A. F. L., that is his personal business," he continued, "but he will not take any textile workers with him."

Gorman asserted the TWOC had been dissolved, basing his contention on a decision by the Providence, R. I., Superior Court that the contract between the U. T. W. and C. I. O., which resulted in organization of the T. W. O. C., was invalid.

The decision, Gorman said, held that the T. W. O. C. had no right to funds of local unions because the contract he signed in March, 1937, with the C. I. O. had not been submitted to a convention of the union.

Gorman estimated the T. W. O. C. had collected $500,000 from U. T. W. members since March, 1937. He predicted "months, possibly years of court litigation before legal technicalities are settled." The T. W. O. C. has appealed the Rhode Island ruling.

The situation was complicated by the type of organization which has carried on the C. I. O.'s activities in the textile field. When Gorman signed a contract with the C. I. O. on behalf of the U. T. W., organizing efforts were concentrated in the Textile Workers Organizing Committee.

C. I. O. officials assert that $50,000 have been brought into the T. W. O. C., but these are not all members of the U. T. W. Although Gorman asserted the U. T. W. membership was in excess of 100,000, Hillman said only half a dozen T. W. locals had not been absorbed by the T. W. O. C. and that these locals had not over 2,000 members.

Trustee Charged With Fraud in 14 Million Estate

New York, Dec. 13 (AP).—Mrs. Dorothy Ledyard Knight today charged Thomas H. Wilson, vice president of the United States Trust Co., with defrauding her and her two infant daughters of their share in the $14,000,000 estate of her father, the late Lewis Cass Ledyard, jr., once a director of the Chase National Bank.

She also accused Wilson of perjury and falsification of State income tax reports.

Last May Mrs. Knight asked surrogate's court at Mineola, N. Y., to remove the trust company as executor of her father's estate, in which she and two other children shared equally.

stopping at a Manhattan tavern.

While Kane drank, O'Hara went home and the killers, lying in ambush near the entrance, apparently mistook him for Kane.

After the slaying of O'Hara, who left a widowed mother and a 16-year-old sister, Kane was picked up for parole violation and returned to Sing Sing.

Prison authorities worked on the theory that Kane was killed by convicts carrying out the death sentence after the blunder of O'Hara's slaying. They said Kane was supposed to have known the inside story of the spectacular $427,000 Rubel armored car holdup in Brooklyn in 1933—the biggest cash haul in New York criminal annals. He also had been questioned in connection with the murder of Thomas ("The Harp") Sheridan, on January 9, 1935.

people riding in cabs any more?" brought gruff replies.

Things didn't get better, "later on," as he hoped. Things got worse. And the truth failed to come out until—during the recent few days of extremely cold weather—Jim returned home to "rest" for a half hour or so.

Questioning Jim, Mrs. H finally drew from him that, for weeks, he had been "resting" several times each day—in the cab, temporarily parked on an out of the way street or alley. After an hour of driving, he had to stretch out in the back seat—to relieve the pain—had to do it five or six times a day.

Three Months' Aid

Only the sudden cold spell had driven him home with his confession.

Jim's wife made him comfortable, got someone to look after the children and went out to take the first job she could find. Then she made her husband see a doctor, follow the doctor's advice.

Mr. H is now getting the medical attention he needed so badly. He will be back at work again, healthy and whole, in about three months. But the $45 a month his courageous wife earns is not enough to meet the family's needs. Sixty dollars, spread over the next three months, will do that. Can you help?

Contributions may be mailed to The Washington Post's Neediest Families Fund, or left in the Neediest Families Fund Box at the counter on the first floor of The Post Building, 1337 E street northwest.

Standards Bureau Bus Line Ordered To Extend Service

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday ordered the extension of the Bureau of Standards bus line from Tenley Circle westward to Westmoreland Circle effective Sunday morning.

At the same time action on the proposed cross-town bus line which would connect Westmoreland Circle with Bladensburg road was deferred for more study.

In ordering the extension of the bus service the commission denied the Capital Transit Co. its petition to serve the Maryland residents near Westmoreland Circle, by rerouting the Massachusetts avenue line.

The route for extension of the bus follows: From Tenley Circle via Yuma, Forty-sixth and Albemarle streets and Massachusetts avenue to Westmoreland Circle. When the roadway on Yuma street has been completed to carry travel the route will be changed so that buses will operate directly over Yuma street to reach Massachusetts avenue and then on to the circle.

Relief Unit Seeks More Investigators

Assistance Division Reports It Is Crippled By Undermanned Staff

The Public Assistance Division of the Board of Public Welfare, operating with a reduced staff of investigators, reported yesterday it was impossible to interview the numerous requests for assistance made last month.

Miss M. Alice Hill, the director, said only 111 cases receiving general public assistance were closed during the month.

"If the case-working staff were larger so that case-loads of each worker were smaller, it is probable that 50 per cent more cases could have been closed by determination of their eligibility for old-age assistance or aid for dependent children, or because it would have been possible, through case-work services, to have helped more families make their own adjustments," she stated.

1,056 Families Aided

There were 1,056 families who received aid for dependent children in November as compared with 1,082 in October and 1,161 in November, 1937.

"This is a decrease within the year of 10 per cent, but with many cases pending action, there is no indication that the need has been reduced," Miss Hill reported.

The director said "chiselers" could be eliminated more rapidly from relief rolls when workers are able to give more time and attention to separate cases.

"It has been impossible to add to the staff assigned to the Intake Department and it is badly overcrowded," Miss Hill said.

6,000 Call at Offices

More than 6,000 persons came into the two District offices for various reasons during the month.

"Social workers interviewed as many persons as was physically possible, but obviously, with only four workers for interviewing, this large volume of work could not be adequately handled," Miss Hill added.

A total of 409 nonresident single men, or double the number who applied in October, asked for assistance during the month. Miss Hill attributed this increase to recent publicity reported increase in building in the District and the need for skilled labor; between 100 and 150 beds available for veterans at Kecoughtan Hospital, Hampton, Va., brought many veterans to the District, and the approach of holidays and cold weather.

Check Girl Leaves $500 to University

New York, Dec. 13 (AP).—Mary Elizabeth Staff, 82, who earned $65 a month as a library cloakroom attendant at Columbia University—and was ever thankful for it—has bequeathed $500 to the university, it was revealed yesterday. She worked there 28 years until she died last May.

A will hidden in a secret pocket in an old bathrobe bequeathed $5 each to 21 girls who worked with her and made other bequests to university employes from a $7,000 estate.

1938 Best Year In Construction Gains Since 1930

The Nation's construction activity for 1938, aggregating about $8,800,000,000 in value, will be the greatest of any year since 1930, the Department of Commerce said Monday.

Included in the total was $540,000,000 of public construction which sent the 1938 figure above the $8,675,000,000 recorded for 1937, though private construction fell off.

Though the current year has seen the greatest number of new dwelling units started of any year since 1929, an idea of the accumulating shortage of homes is gained from the comparative figures. The department pointed out that while new dwelling units in 1938 may attain the nine-year record number of 560,000, the annual average for the years 1920 to 1929 was 675,000 new units.

Baby Turns onGas; Mother and 2 Die

New York, Dec. 13 (AP).—A mother and two infant sons died yesterday by gas, believed by police to have been released from a kitchen stove by the older boy while at play.

His body lay near that of Mrs. Margaret Frost, 28, in a position indicating he had attempted to revive her by tugging at her skirt. He was 3 years old.

His 18-month-old brother died in their mother's arms while being fed. Hans Frost, the father, was absent.

Police figured from the variously angled positions of handles on three open gas jets that the tot unwittingly made a lethal chamber of the apartment.

Bankhead Says South Opposes Third Term

Colored Citizens Hear McCoach on Street Projects

Col. David McCoach, Engineer Commissioner, was the principal speaker Monday at a meeting of the Northeast Civic Council, composed of six colored civic associations. He was introduced by Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, assistant superintendent of schools.

Among improvements scheduled for the area, he mentioned Grant street from Minnesota avenue to Forty-ninth street, and Fifty-first and Fifty-third streets, from Central avenue to Eads streets.

Open valley treatment for Watts Run was suggested as the most economical and desirable development of that stream, to be accomplished through acquirement of land and a WPA project. A playground area, adjoining the site of a proposed junior high school, he said, would be supplemented by a playground adjacent to the new $206,000 addition to Smothers School.

Other speakers were Charles M. Thomas, president of the Federation of Civic Associations; H. D. Woodson, Capt. Hugh H. Groves, W. L. L. Browne, Oliver Macdonald, Patrick M. Tolliver and Z. M. Ramsuer.

3 Hurt, 2 Seriously, In Traffic Mishaps

Traffic accidents Monday sent three persons to hospitals, two with serious injuries.

Four-year-old Bernard Fowler, 111 G street northwest, received a possible fractured skull and cuts when he was knocked down by a truck at New Jersey avenue and G streets northwest.

Mrs. Gladys L. Leitch, 20, 1605 F street northeast, suffered a brain concussion and possible fractured ribs when her machine collided with one driven by Cornelius Smith, 606 Third street southeast, at Second and C streets northeast.

Knocked down by a street car while crossing New York avenue northwest near Thirteenth street, Bryan Culp, 42, Bethesda, Md., suffered cuts and bruises on the head and face.

Collegians Pass Tin Cup to Send Blood to Hitler

Hanover, N. H., Dec. 13 (AP).—"The Adolf Hitler Christmas Stocking Commission," represented by a costumed Santa Claus and four "Storm Troopers," yesterday had a well-worn tin cup and 300 pennies after a tour of Dartmouth's campus.

Its student leader, W. O'Brien Boldt, of Ridgewood, N. J., a senior, said the aim was to send the German Fuehrer four test-tube samples of Aryan-Semitic, Negro and Mongolian blood with a promise of a $5 bonus in pennies if he could tell which was which.

The biggest problem, Boldt said, was to find a good sample of "Grade A" aryan blood.

"We may have to send to Germany to get it," he added.

British Reported Seeking U.S. Aid in Japan Trade War

London, Dec. 13 (U.P.).—A reliable informant told the United Press last night that Britain has informed the United States she will take the lead in declaring trade reprisals against Japan if the United States will follow her example.

The British decision was communicated to the State Department in Washington after consultations during the past month "regarding measures the two nations might take to check Japanese interference with their trade in China."

Man, 63, Bride, 14, Are Reunited in Defiance of Law

Tallula, Ill., Dec. 13 (U.P.).—A 14-year-old child bride and her wealthy 63-year-old husband last night were reported reunited here in defiance of the law which had separated them. They were married in September in Wickliffe, Ky.

Friends and neighbors of the couple said pretty, flaxen-haired Velma Robinson and her husband, Jonas Green, Illinois and Kentucky landowner, were living in a rented one-room flat in Tallula.

Greene returned to Tallula a week ago from Los Angeles. Velma and her father returned approximately 10 days ago after Robinson reportedly promised California authorities he would institute proceeding to annul the marriage.

The California authorities entered the case November 17 when they took Greene and his bride into custody after the two had a noisy quarrel in their hotel room. The girl, sobbing, told police matrons "I don't want to see that old man again."

The Worm Turns! Dentist Pays for Hurting Patient

Baltimore, Dec. 13 (AP).—Magistrate Charles Heintzeman yanked a $5 fine out of Dr. Edward W. Zelinsky yesterday after a patient preferred charges of assault against the dentist.

Dr. Zelinsky, said Patient Herbert Fultz, warned him against crying out with pain while being treated. "Keep quiet," he quoted the doctor as saying, "or you'll drive away my other patient in the waiting room."

When Fultz cried out again, he testified, the dentist struck him over the head with the blunt end of a syringe.

Dr. Hall Named Head Of D. C. Pharmacists

Dr. O. G. Hall Monday was elected president of the Washington branch of the American Pharmaceutical Association.

Other officers chosen were August Boas and Dr. A. F. Siever, and Douglas Tschiffely, vice presidents; Kenneth L. Kelley, secretary; W. T. McClosky, treasurer; and Paul Rezneck, delegate to the association.

The group heard Maj. Gen. James A. Drain, of the Social Security Board, discuss the application of security laws to the pharmacist.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 13 (AP).—The White House Christmas tree again will come from Eastern New York's Grafton Mountains. A 20-foot balsam was cut today by employes of the conservation department and will be shipped to Washington tomorrow.

Va. Democratic Club Here Frowns On Byrd's Stand

The Virginia Democratic Club of Washington Monday adopted a resolution "disapproving" the stand taken by Senator Byrd, of Virginia, in a speech at Boston Saturday condemning administration policies.

The club, meeting at the home of its president, Arthur Clarendon Smith, 2949 Macomb street northwest, elected Gov. Price, of Virginia, and J. Murray Hookar, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, honorary vice presidents.

A plan to admit associate members without voting privileges was approved, and the club voted to change the date to the first Saturday of each month. A dinner dance will be held in connection with each meeting at the Lafayette Hotel.

Sen. Van Nuys May Revive Antilynch Bill

To Confer With Wagner, Co-Author of Measure Killed by Filibuster

By the Associated Press.

Prospects for another Senate battle over an antilynching bill developed yesterday with an announcement by Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, that the controversial measure would be revived.

Van Nuys said he would confer soon with Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, co-author of last session's bill, which was shelved after a filibuster.

There were indications that the Southern bloc would filibuster any motion to bring up the bill for consideration again. Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, predicted recently that it never would be brought to a vote.

Van Nuys said there was little likelihood of change in the bill. As offered before, it would have made counties liable for damages to the kin of lynching victims.

Woman Doctor Seeks Army Service

Harris & Ewing.

If Congress acts favorably on a resolution adopted by the American Medical Women's Association, women may serve in the Army with rank, uniform and pay commensurate to that of men. Dr. Kate B. Karpeles, shown here, one of the few women engaged by the Army as a contract surgeon in the World War and president of the A. M. W. A., said the single standard is desired only in time of war or other great national emergency, and its primary purpose is to release male physicians for duty in the field. Other classes of medical fighters should receive equal treatment, she believes

Industrial Peace Vital to U. S., Georgetown U. Forum Is Told

As long as the United States maintains industrial peace, John J. Stonborough, commissioner of conciliation in the Labor Department, said last night at Georgetown University, "there is no danger that we, like Germany and Russia, may become a neurotic nation which, shirking reality, seeks refuse in the dreams of an irrational wish-world."

Before the weekly forum of the Graduate School, Stonborough warned that "the lesson which we may draw from Europe is that even if the boat is rocked only by a few self-centered hardheads among either capital or labor, the whole boat can be overturned."

In marked contrast to the decline of trade unionism in such countries as Italy, Germany, Portugal, Russia and Turkey, he reminded, is their "swift rise" in this country and the "very great improvement of American industrial relations," especially in the last year.

"The further development of industrial peace in this country" Stonborough declared, "lies in wider application of the principle that in a democracy the liberty of each group is circumscribed by the liberty of all, and placing equal responsibility upon the self-governing groups to see that the general welfare is adequately safeguarded."

Civil Service Calls 'Purge' Of FCC Legal

'Nothing We Can Do' About McNinch Action, Mitchell Reveals

By James D. Secrest.

Chairman Frank R. McNinch's "purge" of the Federal Communications Comission staff was "within the law," Harry B. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission, stated yesterday upon receipt of a report from an investigator.

While explaining that the commission did not approve the "purge" itself, Mitchell said that it did not violate any civil service act or regulation although it abolished three jobs and ousted three veteran civil service employes without hearings.

"We have very limited powers, you understand," he explained. "There is nothing we can do about it under our present law."

"System Broken Down"

G. Franklin Wisner, former chief of press relations, who had been discharged with only a few hours' notice after 12 years' service and an "excellent" civil service rating, said:

"I'm not surprised at the decision. It merely confirms my original statement that the civil service system has broken down and that it offers no protection to Government employes.

"No one in the Government service can feel safe when the politicians can gang up on you and abolish a job on a technicality just to get their friends put in office."

New Dealer In

Wisner was one of three civil service employes who were victims of the McNinch "purge." The others were Arnold G. Davis, former chief examiner, and Melvin H. Dalberg, assistant chief examiner.

Wisner's job was abolished, but a similar office to handle publicity was set up with M. L. Ramsay, New Deal press agent, in charge. The principal difference between the two posts is that the new press agent is under the direction of Chairman McNinch rather than the full commission, as was Wisner.

The examining division also was abolished, but all other examiners, except Davis and Dalberg, were transferred to the legal division, where they now perform duties very similar to what they did prior to the shake-up.

McNinch Foiled Once

The Civil Service Commission balked McNinch in . is first move to "purge" the FCC staff by turning thumbs down on his request that all key jobs within the commission organization be removed from protection of the civil service by Executive order.

While the Civil Service Commission has not taken any formal action, Mitchell made it clear in a letter to McNinch that he considered the request a violation of the spirit of the President's executive order of last June extending the merit system.

Commissioners T. A. M. Craven and George Henry Payne fought against the civil service exemption move and the "purge," but were overruled by the full commission.

The reorganization of the commission, it was learned, will be examined rather thoroughly this month when the commissioners are called before the House sub-committee handling appropriations of independent offices.

The sub-committee is now in session and is due to reach the FCC budget before Christmas.

800 in WPA Here To Be Transferred

An emphatic statement that there is no reason for alarm among District WPA project employes over reports that 800 will soon be slashed from the rolls, came yesterday from Assistant District Administrator Ross Haworth.

There is no truth whatever in rumors 25 per cent would be laid off, he said, and most of the 800 to be let out will be transferred to other project employment.

Should time elapse between the reassignments to work, it was thought that much of this could be made up in overtime on the new jobs.

Mutual Health Service

In outlining details of its proposed Mutual Health Service the Medical Society of the District has fully accepted the challenge of its critics. While recognizing the fact that insurance for medical care is still in the experimental stage, it has made a bold move toward organizing its members for more effective service to families of moderate incomes. That progressive attitude would be highly significant even if details of the plan were less promising.

The distinguishing feature of this proposed Mutual Health Service is that it would guarantee to the subscribers a free choice of physician, providing the physician had agreed to participate in the program. Subscribers would be free to discharge a physician who did not render satisfactory service. Likewise any doctor could refuse to serve a subscriber. In this way one of the most desirable aspects of private medical practice would be preserved.

No doubt there will be some disappointment over the restriction of the plan to individuals with incomes of $2,000 or less and married couples with $2,500 plus $200 additional for each dependent. That arrangement leaves the door open to families who are most in need of protection against medical bills beyond their ability to pay. But experience may indicate the desirability of adjustments in both the income restrictions and the proposed schedule of rates.

The Medical Society would properly maintain control over the undertaking by nominating five members of the board of trustees. But the subscribing group and public health interests would also be represented. Subscribers would name two trustees, the United States Public Health Service and the District Health Department one each. Arbitrary management would be difficult under this set-up.

Success of the plan will depend, of course, on the response of physicians and the public. The committee on medical economics is convinced that the experiment should not be undertaken unless it commands wholehearted support from members of the society. It is contemplated that operation will not begin until 5,000 persons, in groups of 10 or more, have subscribed.

Considering the popularity of the Group Health Association, however, it seems improbable that this competing plan will lack for either physician support or public patronage. It is especially incumbent upon those who have challenged the medical society to take the leadership in this field to co-operate in this constructive move it is now sponsoring.

Up To Missouri

The impressive record of the Supreme Court in upholding individual rights, regardless of race or creed, was further extended by its decision in the Gaines case. In brief, the court decided that the provision of the Fourteenth Amendment, forbidding the States to deny to any person within their jurisdiction "the equal protection of the laws," means what it says.

Justices McReynolds and Butler dissented from the majority opinion delivered by Chief Justice Hughes on the ground that Missouri's present arrangement for educating Negro students in law is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Constitution. Since Negroes have not been admitted to the University of Missouri, and since no separate law school for them has been provided, the State offers to pay the tuition of colored law students at schools in other States.

That concession itself represents a considerable advance over the attitude taken toward Negro education in many Southern States. But it is difficult to see how it can be construed as offering white and colored students equal privileges or equal protection under the law. The majority of the Court simply insisted upon facing realities. "The question here," Chief Justice Hughes pointedly said, "is not of a duty of the State to supply legal training, or of the quality of the training which it does supply, but of its duty when it provides such training to furnish it to the residents of the State upon the basis of an equality of right."

It may rightly be said that the decision creates a difficult problem for Missouri. That State has elected to establish separate schools for white and colored pupils, which it of course has the right to do. To maintain that policy in this instance, however, it is under obligation to set up a competent law school for Negroes for which there seems to be an inadequate demand.

In theory Missouri recognizes this obligation. The Court took note of the argument that Missouri is the only State in the Union which has established a separate university for Negroes on the same basis as the State university for white students. That institution, Lincoln University, now has authority "to open any necessary school or department." Presumably it will request funds to open a Negro law school if there is any substantial demand for such training.

In any event, however, Missouri will meet the problem in its own way. Education is a function over which the States have virtually full control. All the Supreme Court can do is to set them straight when, in the exercise of that control, they encroach upon rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

Two Visitors

Some eighteen months ago two comparatively young men, both veterans of the World War, both burdened with responsibilities beyond their years, discussed together an important visit which one of them was then about to make to the United States. The man who was coming here was Paul Van Zeeland, the Premier of Belgium. The man who was advising on his "exploratory mission," was Anthony Eden, the Foreign Minister of Great Britain.

This week, by not unnatural coincidence, both of these men have been honored guests in Washington. Their visits have not actually overlapped. Dr. Van Zeeland, who spoke at the Town Hall on Sunday night, went on to New York just before Mr. Eden, who spoke at the Press Club yesterday, left that city. The two statesmen—for in or out of office, both are that—have not met on this side of the Atlantic. But both are here for primarily the same purpose.

Both are here as private citizens and free of the responsibility of office, to ascertain, so far as possible, the part which America means to play in the fateful months ahead. We may be certain of the complete sincerity of both when they say that their respective visits have no ulterior motive.

Indeed to look for such a motive is a sign of naivete. For Mr. Eden, and Dr. Van Zeeland, the future holds great promise. In their respective nations each has great influence, and may well gain more in time to come. Their visit to America, as each will freely admit, is in the nature of political education. Today that education necessitates some knowledge of this country.

Anthony Eden has never before been in the United States. Paul Van Zeeland was a postgraduate student at Princeton after the war and was here, in June last year, to press the plan of international economic collaboration which bears his name. But today Dr. Van Zeeland, like Mr. Eden, has no solution to propound, no cause of action to advocate, no ax to grind. These two young men are here to learn, not to impart.

What will they learn? That the United States is hospitable; that it is very prosperous by European standards; that it is energetic, strong, well-meaning, and not devoid of keen intelligence—so much is obvious.

But beyond that, what? Of the feeling of responsibility which must go with power; of the will to use energy and intelligence in some long-range constructive pattern; of the ability to make democracy a vital force in the sense that totalitarian doctrines are clearly vital—will such characteristics be noted by these visitors?

They could tell us. But they will not do so. It is the habit of European visitors to be polite and what they really think will be concealed, except insofar as the mere fact of their presence gives a hint.

The inclusion of Washington as a capital which must now be constantly in the thought of every competent European statesman is itself an index of the moral leadership which Eden and Van Zeeland seek to find here. Of our power for that leadership there is no question. It is on the matter of will that doubt exists, even though in this field old apathies are clearly breaking down. The problem is whether they will disappear in time.

Delayed Benefits

A certain amount of difficulty is to be expected in effecting smooth operation of the unemployment insurance system. When a large number of jobless men entitled to benefits are denied payments for periods as long as nine weeks, however, it is time to give serious thought to improvement of administrative machinery.

New York's labor department has found that only 32 per cent of 58,109 persons certified for unemployment benefit payments received their checks on time last month. Of the first payments 55 per cent were from 1 to 9 weeks overdue. Work of determining the eligibility of men unemployed twice during the year was at a standstill, although 230,000 applications were awaiting attention.

No doubt this situation is duplicated in other States. It tends to undermine the confidence of workers in the whole social security system adopted for their benefit. If State administrations are wise, they will concentrate attention upon this problem until hardships due to inefficient organization are eliminated.

Talk of extending the social security system gives special point to the demands for more effective administration. If the States are not yet able to distribute funds already available with any greater dispatch than the New York division of placement and unemployment insurance has shown, Congress will have little incentive to widen the scope of this legislation.

South American Loans

Secretary Morgenthau says that the Treasury is earnestly studying plans for stimulating trade between the United States and the countries of Latin America. And he intimates that Congress might be asked to approve Government proposal to lend funds directly to our Southern neighbors so that they can buy more of our goods.

Congress will certainly reflect upon the results of past lending to foreign nations, during the Great War and the following decade, before assenting to any such plan. We now hold billions of dollars in defaulted war debts owing to the Government. And other billions of dollars of bonds floated in this country by foreign borrowers have brought heavy losses to private investors. When the lending mania was at its height, loans to countries with weak credit were often made without any regard for the debt-paying capacity of the borrower or the ability to utilize borrowed funds safely and productively.

Loans from one government to another are especially likely to result in losses when they are designed (as is usually the case), to further political as well as economic ends. Our ill-fated war loans afford an outstanding example of the extremes to which lending of an intergovernmental political character may go. The impossibility of collecting the sums due us under the debt-funding agreements seemed self-evident from their inception to most trained economists. But for purposes of the record we still officially support the illusion that these obligations will eventually be discharged.

In Latin America the experience of private lenders has likewise been unfortunate. Of the $1,200,000,000 of foreign dollar bonds floated there, and still outstanding at the end of 1935, over 77 per cent were in default. If the bonds of Argentina are excluded the default record is close to 100 per cent. Interest charges on the foreign debts contracted by South and Central American countries in the nineteen-twenties, chiefly in the United States, became so heavy in many cases that they were met for a time by floating new loans. When this source of new capital dried up, wholesale defaults ensued.

The United States has had good cause to repent of the lending excesses that brought about an artificial boom in our export trade in the twenties, with a subsequent collapse demoralizing to domestic business as well as foreign trade. The countries to the south of us are just beginning to recover from the effects of the borrowing and spending sprees which plunged them hopelessly into debt and destroyed their credit standing with American investors.

In view of the wholesale expropriation of American property by Mexico, and the discrimination practiced against our exporters by other Latin-American states, Congress may well have doubts about the advisability of risking more capital in Latin America. Certainly it will insist upon stringent guarantees of fair and equal treatment for American interests if such loans are pressed.

"When you get tired, go to bed and stay there until you are rested," advised a physician. But, doc, we have to get up sometimes and go out and make a living, such as it is.

An employe of a Des Moines amusement park has been taking up tickets on a merry-go-round 20 years. He has been going for a long time without getting anywhere.

A Chicago woman has been yawning for almost a week. It's one of those rare cases in which a woman stops talking for a while and listens to her husband.

Cheer up, men. Feminine knees are making their reappearance, and soon we won't even notice the girls' hats and hairdos.

Tax Compromise

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Thomas Huxley is responsible for the story of two English boys found fighting over the color of lobsters; one saying they were green and the other insisting that red was the color. Neither boy had seen them in the other condition.

Something like that position has draped itself around the discussion of the revision of the local tax system, and clearly marks the hearings held by the advisory committee and the resolutions passed by civic bodies.

As is to be expected the city officials think in terms of revenue production, excepting the corporation counsel, who, in the language of the late Justice Cardozo, says, "The welfare of society is the final cause of law, and the rule that misses its aim cannot permanently justify its existence, any more than one can exclude vital air from his room and live." With him are the citizenry-representatives generally; hence the slow approach to a plan meeting the approval of the whole group.

As the capital of the greatest democracy, today, we have reached the point quoted in the constitutional opinions of Justice Holmes, where, "The movement from individualistic liberalism to unsystematic collectivism has brought changes in the social order which carried with them the need of new formulation of fundamental rights and duties."

When, as one witness testified, $50,000,000 had been drawn from local banks just before the intangible tax became due, giving the District but $3,000,000 in taxes from that source, and that being a penalty upon savings as well as an assessment upon securities that may have no market value, such a tax becomes valueless in comparison with one upon incomes, upon property or wealth and a surplus of salary made possible largely by the very peace, order and property of the community which the Government protects. Hence the substitution of the new for the old. Upon this there seems to be committee and community agreement, in part at least.

When, however, the forgoing "nonwage, non-salary tax on unearned incomes" is coupled with, "a modified ad valorem commodity tax," food and medicine being exempt, a balance in bearing the necessary burdens of government is struck in harmony with the principle of distribution through taxation. The very poor and unemployed must receive in provision for general welfare as much and more than the pennies they pay as citizens; their morale is strengthened and their righteous requests must get hearing when properly expressed.

Home For Drunks

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have been thinking about that $200,000 farm Commissioner Hazen is considering to have used as a home for our poor drunkards.

I am very much interested, but just wonder if $200,000 will be sufficient to provide a home for our drunkards of today and the boys in their 'teens and twenties, who may become drunkards in a few years hence? And while we are about it, how about a home of the same kind for women?

In the not too far away future, will we not need to provide such a home for them?

Russia And America

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In regard to "Browder Brainstorm," this idea of a Russo-American axis is not so far-fetched as you would like to think.

Russia, like the United States, is a country of large territorial extent, containing within its continental borders nearly all the raw materials needed for the development of its economy. Russia, like the United States, has a population, which, while large, is yet not crowded when compared with the area available.

The United States has few colonies and dependencies and does not want any more. (In fact we are trying to get rid of some of those we have.) Russia has no colonies and few dependencies, and does not want any more.

Most Americans would like to see the Chinese and the Spanish loyalists win their wars. Russia has been friendly to those two peoples. True, the Russian help, extended to China and Spain has not been totally disinterested. But has our help to other nations (Cuba for instance) been entirely altruistic? Is our own interest in China entirely disconnected from our concern for American investment in China?

I do not advocate, as Browder seems to, a formal alliance between the two countries, but I do think that so long as our interests are parallel we might show a little more co-operative spirit in our diplomatic maneuvering. I think, especially, that we should avoid placing ourselves in opposition in any diplomatic situation with a country like Russia whose world interests and objectives are so nearly the same as ours, namely, peace, maintenance of the status quo, and enforcement of the sanctity of treaties.

FIFTH GENERATION AMERICAN.
Lusby, Md., Dec. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The belief has been expressed by many with whom I have talked that at times the Gallup Poll published in your paper has been used for propaganda purposes. If this be true the danger is far greater because of its accuracy on certain occasions which would tend to establish confidence in all of its reports.

On the one page last Sunday, we find the survey urging the continuance of the Dies committee and the report asserting that 83 per cent of the American people favor Russia in the event of a Russian-Germany conflict.

It is not conceivable that 83 real Americans could be found in a group of 100 anywhere who would declare that they would favor the side of the Stalin butchery running into the millions in any conflict. Certainly it is not believable that you could find 50 out of any 100 of your American readers who would support the Soviet program of hatred against God and man—the constant purges and slaughter of all who dare to breathe the slightest disapproval or fail to carry out the dictator's orders to his full pleasure. No horrors have occurred anywhere on earth compared with those transpiring constantly in Soviet Russia.

The American people want neither Communism nor Fascism in this country and under no circumstances do they want to go to war on the side of any dictator at any time.

The McIntire Appointment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Because of the fact that your initial editorial of December 5 has probably created in the minds of persons not entirely familiar with the naval system of promotions a distinctly erroneous impression and knowing your editorial policy of fair comment, I am impelled to invite your attention to an apparent misinterpretation of the action of the President in appointing Dr. McIntire, subject to Senate confirmation, to the position of Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery and Surgeon General of the Navy.

Dr. McIntire was not "promoted" to the rank of Rear Admiral, as your editorial states. Promotions in the Navy are regulated by law, which prescribes the procedure or system to be followed, but the system includes no provision for making appointments to the office of Chief of Bureau. Such appointments are provided for by other provisions of law having no relation to the promotion system. The promotion of other officers who were eligible for the position to which Dr. McIntire was appointed, or their chances of promotion, will in no degree be affected or impaired because of his selection, for the reason that he retains his regular place on the list of officers in the Navy Register, although designated as having the rank of Rear Admiral during his term of office.

Other officers who were eligible for appointment to the position merely lost, for four years, the chance to be so appointed. Such loss is admittedly of consequence to those who will within four years become too old for such an appointment, but the best interests of the service, and consequently of the country, require that highly responsible positions be entrusted to those whose records appear to indicate as best fitted. This is the fundamental intent of the "promotion system" prescribed by law and it is logical that appointments to commands and positions in the service conform to that intent. The law provides no machinery for determining what officer is best fitted for the office of Chief of Bureau. That task rests upon the President.

Probably one of the most responsible assignments a medical officer of the Navy can be given is that of regular attendance upon the Commander-in-Chief. It requires not only professional skill, but untiring devotion to duty regardless of hours, the courage to be firm, unquestionable discretion and consistent tact. His responsibility is to the country to protect and conserve the health and energies of his charge. One who successfully meets such requirements, over a considerable period of time, must be awarded a very high mark in a comparison of records. Any assumption that the President did not consider the records of other eligibles in this case is unwarranted. His knowledge of the naval service is thorough and understanding.

The case of the late Rear Admiral Grayson is not in point, as he was, in fact, "promoted" to the rank of Rear Admiral and not "appointed" to the office of Chief of Bureau.

Note From Pisgah

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I read a quotation from your paper in Des Moines Register in which you said the "Grange" wanted higher prices for farm products. Of course we farmers do. We are not getting cost of production.

We farmers buy our supplies in a market measured by gold and sell in a market measured by silver, or in other words for about one-third the price we should receive. It is estimated that 90 per cent of the farmers' products are consumed in the home market. But it is the exportable surplus that sets the price both at home and abroad.

Winter Town

THE MAN from the snow train had fine boots and skis. He had a good pair of blue pants, too, like the jumpers wear. But, along a soft and gentle slope, he slid only a few feet before he fell.

There were a lot of kids above him on the hill crest, but they didn't laugh. You see, their parents had told them that the snow train would bring a lot of business into the little town where they lived. They knew that business was a good thing—or so they had been told—and so they did not laugh when the man with the fine skiing clothes fell on the gentle slope.

Instead, they pushed their poles behind them and sped quickly over the bump and down into the hard run. In the hard and steep run most of the kids fell. But they got up again and then leaped the brook with the ice on it and were on their way over the hills.

Behind them there was a tall man with fat around his stomach. He was brushing the snow off his ski clothes and talking to a girl. "You can see that I'm not in condition," was what he said.

Now, I don't know whether I can tell you about all this. What I have done, you undertsand, is funny. What I have seen has sometimes been dramatic.

I grew up in a winter town. I grew up on skates and skis. The skates were all right—you had only a little way to fall—but the skis went out from under on a downhill slide.

Some other time, perhaps, I will tell you about my private skiing. Now I want to talk about others I have seen. I want to talk about those who put drama into the commonplace.

There was a fellow named Zeke Jones. He came from the wrong side of the town. He had a loose-lipped, inbred face and a pair of hard-won skis. He also had a confident courage. He was not afraid to risk his skis or his neck on any jump. And so, because he tried, he often won.

Well, I once saw Zeke against Olympic competition, a competition that he'd earned in lesser meets. In a meet where both form and distance counted he jumped twice and was obviously far behind. Then, on his third and final try, he leaped far beyond the record for the day. And that teeth-set jump didn't count because Zeke fell, rolling to the bottom of the incline unhurt. He got up at the bottom and grinned at the fragment of one of his skis that stuck in the slope a hundred feet above.

As a rule, you could count on the Scandinavians to win the big jump of the year. They were right from Norway and Sweden and they had been born almost on the thin laths that are so fast at skimming over crystallized snow. A hard-sliding, hard-drinking crew, we always thought they were when they came to town for the big meet.

Yet, I have seen them beaten, beaten like professional heavyweights at the hands of college fighters.

Without heraldry, a skier from a New Hampshire college came down one day and in three effortless jumps made the Scandinavian professionals look like children. That seemed like a glamorous episode to me.

But maybe the most dramatic of all the things I saw on the big jump was not something done on skis.

A local boy came down from college one year and went over the jump on a toboggan, zipping through space at 150 miles an hour. A month afterward he killed himself with a rifle. He was bored with life.

Maybe these things occur to the children when they watch the snow-train men fall on easy slopes. After all, business is business.

HETER O'DOX.

Skeptical

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is said that Anthony Eden is here to sound out America on the European situation. For whatever it may be worth, here is the reaction of a member of the substantial minority which once favored participation of the United States in the League but which now feels the worst fears of isolationists are fast being realized.

Let there be no doubt of the friendship between the United States and the United Kingdom—a friendship that has grown steadily since the day we discovered to our chagrin that the taxes of an independent State were even higher than those we objected to as an English colony—a friendship that is impressed on us every time we cross the long, unpatrolled, unfortified boundary that divides the United States from Canada—a friendship that is older than the friendship between any other world powers.

Many Americans who have favored world co-operation for peace have believed that the failure of the United States to back Great Britain is responsible for the increasing weakness of British influence in Europe. But it is not possible to explain or excuse the Munich agreement in the same way. Great Britain was not forced by circumstances into this disgraceful pact, but entered into it with an alacrity that raises the question of how much longer Great Britain can be counted among the "great democracies" as opposed to the "totalitarian states."

The active co-operation which many of us urged on our country before Munich can now be won only by return of the British spirit that reduced Napoleon to a state of helplessness and harmlessness. So despite the old friendship between us, we are cynically relieved that there is no American territory which England can trade to the totalitarian states in return for what it mistakenly regards as peace—as it did in the case of Czecho-Slovakia and as we fear it will do in the case of France.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

An Explosive Topic

PROBABLY nothing could be done about this by law, but the employers of this country and the politicians who control appointive positions could spread the available work to much greater advantage if they would make a practice of refusing to hire women who do not actually need the work and would gradually eliminate such women from their pay rolls. This would affect married women whose husbands are able to support them in reasonable security and comfort and a great number of single women who take jobs merely to have something to do until they marry and, having married, after a few years, retain their positions in competition with necessitous males who have dependent families. Certain individual alimony clients also would be included.

PEGLER

Of course, each case would have to be judged on its particular merits, and labor unions probably would intervene in some cases to protect the jobs of dues-paying members selected for dismissal in favor of men.

IT IS AN explosive topic, as anyone may learn by introducing it in private conversation in mixed company, but the fact cannot be denied that many family units have more jobs than they need while many others have none, and thus enjoy luxuries while the others lack bare necessities.

The proposal is no stranger in Washington, where, on being presented a few years ago, it was denounced as vicious on the ground that virtuous citizens of both sexes in the Government employ would be compelled to forego holy matrimony and live in a state of sin to avoid economic injustice. This seemed to place a cash price—and not a very flattering price, either—on the virtue of those for whom the plea was offered, but that was a delicate phase of the subject, and emphasis was placed instead on the horrid role that Uncle Sam would play in forcing honorable American girls into a life of shame.

NEVERTHELESS, there are in Washington, as well as in most other centers of the public service down to the country courthouses and town halls, many married women, the wives of able and steady providers, who hold jobs that might otherwise be given to heads of families with no injustice or impairment of the public service.

From the time that women first entered business in considerable numbers they have had a depressing effect on wages. Employers first engaged them as a type of coolie labor—widows left penniless and daughters of poor families, paying them wages which they had to accept because they were in want. The young modern-woman type came next, crowding into the employment market to take jobs which otherwise might have been given to men but in many cases without any real necessity.

SO IN TIME it came to be said, and with truth, too, that young men were not able to propose marriage and undertake family responsibilities because they couldn't make enough money. The fact has been, however, that the presence of so many women, possibly pining for marriage, in the job market has depressed their own chances of matrimony by curtailing the supply of jobs and the level of wages for men.

Obviously if a young woman does not need work for her actual support, but takes a job only to supply herself with luxuries and spending money, she need not hold out for a salary suitable to the work, and it certainly is no secret that employers take advantage of the fact that an applicant lives at home and is not the provider for the family.

GENERALLY SPEAKING, this proposal would eliminate no woman or girl in actual need of her wages, although it would be construed to that effect. It would, however, ease out of the employment market a vast number of more or less dilettante workers, many of them drawing sufficient pay to support a family in decent condition, and make room for unemployed men with responsibilities.

It can be accomplished only as a practice, not by law, and, naturally, some occupations would have to be exempt entirely. It may be conceded without an argument, for instance, that the field of dancing and parading in the nude pelt in night clubs and World's Fair attractions is safe for the distaff side even against the competition of jobless young males from the dramatic societies of Havard and Princeton.

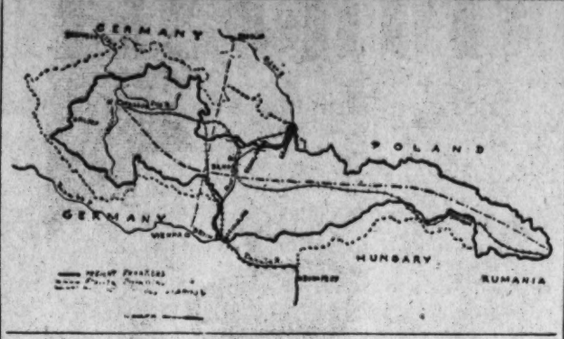
$850,000,000 Health Plan Held Self-Liquidating

The national health program which Congress will consider next year would be self-liquidating, though costing the Nation's taxpayers up to $850,000,000 annually, Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General, said yesterday.

Addressing the American Farm Bureau Federation at New Orleans, Dr. Parran said the program would pay for itself if it did no more than stamp out syphilis, which afflicts an estimated 10 per cent of the population.



Czecho-Slovakia Now

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Prague.

ADVANCING German frontiers came to a halt on November 24. At least for the time being. The final reckoning was milder than Prague had feared in its blackest moments. True, Germany penetrated farther into several regions, but it agreed to evacuate many communities where overzealous German troops had gone beyond the line.

Now German pressure retires from the open and dives underground again. Hitler has plans for Czecho-Slovakia — great plans, German plans. Day by day the signs of his intentions grow clearer and clearer; day by day it becomes more a question of how far Prague must go along with them.

Little, seemingly innocent things, betray the trend. One day the Nazi organ, the Volkischer Beobachter, suddenly appears prominently displayed on every newsstand. Another time we hear the German University will remain in Prague instead of moving to Reichenberg, as previously announced. Why, if not to bring German students here from the Reich? Perhaps they may come to study, more likely they will come to spread propaganda. As a base for propaganda the university is perfect, and undoubtedly for that reason the Reich would not like to see it moved.

EVERY DAY there is some passing incident, some bit of news—a symptom of the underground penetration.

Where do these plans lead? Not only to undermining the country but directly to its division. The Morava-Oder Canal, which a short while ago was only a plan, has now become a definite project, and already Germany in its last "advance" or "rectification," as it is more properly called, took over the town of Devin, which controls the juncture of the Danube and Morava rivers.

Very shortly work is to commence on the North and South Autostrade, running directly Breslau-Brno-Vienna. A simple autostrade, but in Prague it is often called the autocorridor. It will run through Czecho-Slovakia at a point where it is only 37½ miles wide. Germany will pay all expenses, except the cost of the land. Germany will actually own it with extraterritorial rights, and Germany will police it. As far as is known there is no restriction on how the Reich may use the route, but it won't be finished before the end of 1940.

Czechs comfort themselves with the thought that in case of a war Germany would immediately occupy this section anyway, so the autostrade hardly changes the picture, particularly as an enemy plane could play havoc with it. But neither one of these thoughts is very reassuring when it comes to the question of Czecho-Slovak independence.

NOW THAT railway communications from the western to eastern end are cut, Czecho-Slovakia is planning another autostrade across the country. It might well be called the Drang Nach Osten boulevard. In Prague, they say, the Ministers of Poland and Hungary have objected because if a car should go very fast along it the mud would spatter over into their respective countries! But there's a far better reason—the very reason why Poland and Hungary are doing everything within their power to get a common frontier, and the reason why Berlin is so bent on keeping Ruthenia in Czecho-Slovakia. Hitler wants his opening wedge, hence the German press goes to great pains to deny any disturbances in Sub-Carpathian Ukraine, while Poland and Hungary apparently still send terrorists to provoke trouble, and broadcast to the world that the situation there is intolerable.

Little Ruthenia, so poor, still so backward, has suddenly acquired a staggering nuisance value; for it can be used to infect the Achilles heel of Poland—the Polish Ukraine. Hitler has suddenly become a protector against Hungarian and Polish designs. The people of Javorina in the High Tatras have even appealed to him against the annexation of their little region to Poland.

A glance at the map shows that Prague is in no position to resist Hitler's plans. Germany can, quite easily, cut her off from the rest of the world, since all important railroads now go through Germany, even the lines linking Prague with such important centers as Bratislava, Olmutz and Moravska Ostrava. The direct raliroad, formerly connecting Czecho-Slovakia and Rumania, now runs through both German and Hungarian territory. If they so desired, the Germans could actually plunge Prague into darkness, for at least one-half of its electricity comes from a plant at Ervenice, now in their territory.

WITH SUCH an overwhelming advantage Germany can exert pressure on internal affairs. And if those were her intentions it seemed certain she would show her hand in the choice of a candidate for the Presidency. But the choice fell on a black horse—on Hacha (pronounced (Ha-ha). His name had never appeared among the many candidates, and for days everyone had spoken of Chvalkovsky (present foreign minister) as the future President.

Why, indeed, was the candidate changed? Chvalkovsky was definitely in line for the position; then something happened. Officially, they said he wanted to continue directing foreign affairs; but unofficially there were many rumors—perhaps Berlin was opposed, if not on political grounds, perhaps on a personal one.

Of the three possible requirements for President, the candidate had either to be a pro-German, a neutral or a financier. The choice fell, so it seemed, on the second—a man without politics.

Hacha has been president of the Superior Administrative Court. As an ardent Catholic he is acceptable to the Slovaks, but he must also, for some reason, be acceptable to Berlin. The newspapers are at pains to point out his wide abilities, his great interest in the question of autonomy, his high repute as a jurist and as the Czecho-Slovak delegate to the International Court of The Hague. He has had a long and distinguished career, but not one that arouses the popular imagination.

AT A TIME when the form of the state has been radically changed by granting autonomy to Slovakia and Sub-Carpathian Russia an expert jurist as President may prove of great value. Now that the new government will probably be endowed with "full powers," the President may become a great influence in himself, or may be simply a figurehead behind which the government will act.

As that government is headed by Beran, former leader of the Agrarians and now head of the Party of National Union, the trend will be openly right. He has prescribed an autocratic democracy for his country, and he himself has always favored close relations with the Reich. As in the new government there will be only three ministries common to the whole country—foreign affairs, defense and finance—agreement should prove comparatively easy.

No one can envy the man who must undertake such reconstruction, who must reconcile the three new national divisions, and who must carry the country while its further subjugation by Germany remains a real possibility.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

Financing By Ransom Money

THE GERMAN government had it in its power from the beginning to facilitate an orderly emigration of the racial and political minorities whom it wished to get rid of and at the same time to assist its own export trade. I, myself, in a small book on the refugee problem which was written early last summer, proposed such a plan.*

DOROTHY THOMPSON

At that time there was still in Germany Jewish wealth estimated at between 12 and 20 billion marks. There was also—and there still is—in Germany, hundreds of millions of dollars worth of blocked foreign exchange, either belonging to Germans who had already emigrated or to foreigners, many of them Americans. In the accounts of the latter there are probably several billions of dollars invested in good faith for the benefit of themselves and of Germany.

TODAY, with few exceptions, the foreign owners of blocked accounts cannot collect either the principal or the interest of their investment. The only way in which they can realize on their property is to liquidate it in the open international market. But whereas the mark retains its purchasing power and a high value inside Germany under the ingenious system designed by Dr. Schacht, it now stands abroad at about 5 cents for the blocked mark, so that a foreign owner who sells a blocked account of a million marks realizes only some $50,000.

And the same is true of blocked funds belonging to emigrants. If they should, or even could, transfer their funds abroad at the present rate they would lose so much that only the immensely wealthy could salvage enough to help them build up a new existence.

I SUGGESTED that the blocked accounts inside Germany could be used to capitalize the export of German capital goods inside an organized plan of emigration and mass settlement by which Germany could co-operate in building up new colonies in underpopulated countries at a great advantage to herself.

But this presumed on the part of the German government a slight modicum of reasonability and willingness to co-operate in the solution of a problem that the German government itself had created.

It is now clear that not an iota of such a spirit exists. Mr. George Rublee, the director of the intergovernmental refugee committee which was set up at the Evian conference, has been waiting for weeks in London, hoping to be received by the German government to discuss with it a reasonable plan.

But the German government has not even accorded him the courtesy of a hearing.

ON THE CONTRARY, the German government now comes forward with a plan of its own.

This plan is simply outrageous. And it is to be hoped that it will be rejected categorically and finally.

This plan is nothing more or less than the extortion of ransom money from the Jews of the whole world.

It is nothing more or less than a forced loan to be levied on the Jewish citizens of other countries.

They are to be persuaded to send their capital to Germany—new capital—in order to subsidize German exports.

The Jewish capital that existed in Germany when I proposed a plan in the summer has been destroyed willfully; maliciously destroyed. In a dispatch from Berlin in the Sunday Times Mr. Tolischus estimated that it had been reduced from 50 to 80 per cent either by direct confiscation or by destruction. For a Jewish business, being arbitrarily closed down, loses its clients and its good will, and the wealth built up is destroyed.

IN THE FIRST PLACE, there is no guaranty that new capital sent to Germany will not be treated in exactly the same way .

In the second place, if you begin paying ransom money to kidnapers you are subsidizing kidnaping. If this pretty idea works for Germany, so that the rest of the world finances her export trade in order to save people from being willfully starved and killed, why should not other governments who think they have a minority problem adopt the same technique?

And if the German government can persuade the world to buy free its Jewish citizens why not then go on to extort capital in the same fashion in behalf of Catholics, Protestants or any other group who can be held as a hostage?

The German government can next suggest that if Catholic property is to remain in the hands of the church and the church is to remain open, English and French and American Catholics should purchase the property with dollars or pounds or francs sent to the German government with which to finance German exports at the expense of those of other countries and leave German money free for armament and international propaganda and espionage.

There is simply no end to this kind of hijacking game once one starts to play it. Therefore, the world must say no in a tone that cannot possibly be misunderstood.

THE GERMAN government is paying the penalty of its own outrages.

In fairness to the German people it must be made clear that this pogrom has outraged Germans as much as it has outraged the rest of the world.

The disgust goes from the ranks of the common people to some of the highest officials in the German government, including members of the Gestapo, who have stretched the decrees on occasion after occasion at the risk of their personal safety.

The German government knows this and wants to appear before its own people in a good light. It wants to be able to say that if its victims starve, commit suicide and otherwise perish in their midst it is the fault of the outside world, which has heartlessly refused to save them.

But the German people are not so stupid. They know what the outside world has done and is doing.

They know that the American consulates have become harbors of refuge in every city where they exist.

And they will not be deceived in this matter.

The outside world at this moment has got to be hard unless it is prepared to be victimized in a manner and on a scale absolutely unprecedented.

Millions for aid to the unfortunate! Not one cent for tribute!

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Feminine Reaction To Anthony Eden

I said: "That's Mr. Eden, love;
He's England's new boy wonder;
He's feared by all those up above
And seldom makes a blunder.
He is a statesman very great,
Resourceful, able, active."
She heaved a sigh and then did state,
"I think he's SO attractive!"

II.

I said: "That's Anthony, my dear!
His star is swiftly rising;
He's paying us a visit here—
His views are quite surprising.
He is the statesman of the day,
Wherever trouble's cooking."
She looked and said in tones quite gay:
"My! Isn't he good-looking?"

III.

I said: "That's Capt. Eden, sweet;
He's destined for a title;
He is a speaker hard to beat—
His manner is so vital;
He is a very mighty force,
A diplomat most able." . . .
She said: "I think he is, of course,
Much handsomer than Gable."

IV.

I said: "He will go very far
And be a topmost figure;
Ahead of him I see no bar—
Each day he grows much bigger;
He may lead England some great day,
And soon may come his hour." . . .
She said: "I think him, in a way,
As good as Tyrone Power."

V.

I told her of his great career,
His courage in a battle;
His utter lack of any fear,
His mind so anti-rattle;
I told how very high he stood,
Where many lands are shaking.
She said: "I know he must be good. . . .
What picture is he making?"

Appearances Deceptive

The whole world is getting warmer, Russian scientists say. But still, in its recent shape, it doesn't look so hot.

President Roosevelt will give to the U. S. A. his Hyde Park estate upon his death. We knew his house without a phone would make him sick of the whole business.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

Chesterton

WHOEVER wrote the "blurb" on the dust jacket of "The Colored Lands," written and illustrated by G. K. Chesterton (Sneed & Ward, $3) was inspired. "This book," says the blurb writer, "is crammed with the things you would have got from Chesterton had you been his week-end guest."

It is precisely that. The book is an intimate and delicious nonsensical hodgepodge. It includes a schoolboy skit, "Half Hours in Hades," written in G. K. C.'s school days, back in 1891; a caricature of a slim young man, done in the same faraway age; a few fragments of essays, "serious but not solemn," which Chesterton never finished; a flock of nonsense rhymes, mostly addressed to close friends, sometimes as Christmas cards, and illustrated, in crayon or in color, by the author himself. A characteristic sample:

I wish I were a jellyfish
That cannot fall downstairs;
Of all the things I wish to wish
I wish I were a jellyfish
That hasn't any cares,
And doesn't even have to wish
"I wish I were a jellyfish
That cannot fall downstairs."

AN EQUALLY characteristic sample is the parable based upon the old story of George Stephenson, inventor of the locomotive, and the skeptical Member of Parliament who asked the inventor what would happen if a cow meandered onto the track. "It would be too bad for the cow," was, as even the Youngest Inhabitant well knew, Stephenson's answer. But as the Oldest Inhabitant adds in Chesterton's parable, that was only the beginning of the story. The cow meandered, and died, as was prophesied. That came to be known in history as the Depression of Agriculture. Long afterward a war cut off the big city's supply of milk and inquiring city folk were greatly surprised to learn that milk came not from large cans but from cows, and that there were no more cows within reach of the city.

They began, the Oldest Inhabitant explains, to wish they had not made it so awkward for cows, almost to wish that they had cows of their own or, at least, cows within easy access. But the Progressives and Optimists said it was too late, and while they were eagerly explaining this the babies died and the land became desolate, except for a few lunatics, who lingered for a while, earnestly attempting to milk the steam engine.

"Some say," the old man concluded, "that the steam engine still wanders over the plain, like a lost spirit, singing its lonely song." "Is that," asked the Youngest Inhabitant, "what is called the Railway Whistle?" "We generally call it," replied the other, "The Tune the Old Cow Died Of.'"

Such was Chesterton. Such is this scrapbook of Chestertoniana.

A HIGHLY INFORMAL and gossipy travel story is Ladislas Farago's account of his adventure on the fringe of the new Italian Empire, "Arabian Antic" (Sheridan House, $2.50). "Antic" is the word for it; Mr. Farago, a Hungarian-born English citizen traveling for the sensation-seeking London Sunday Chronicle, was, in the spring of 1937, looking for fun and trouble, and he found both.

Yemen was his goal. Mr. Farago was interested because none of his friends seemed to have heard of it.

A fur merchant gave Farago a convenient fake commission to buy goatskins for him in Yemen. In fact, he had hardly landed in Aden, the British citadel at the south end of the Red Sea, before the whole coast knew all about Farago, his real mission, and several assumed spying missions. The history of Arabia gives it ample excuse for suspicion of foreigners; Mr. Farago interrupts his travel tale with some pleasantly lurid versions of Arabian history.

MR. FARAGO never reached the Yemenite capital of Sana; he did land in Hodeida, but only after expensive correspondence. Letters were too mean to reach the Sultan of Yemen, and telegrams had to be addressed formally (each word of the address being paid for) to "His Majesty Mohammed Yahya Hamid ed-Din Motawakkil Bin Achmed-ed-Din Mohammed Mansur, Imam and King of the Yemen, Sana," and signed, after an interlude in flowery Arabic, "Your slave." His Majesty did not deign to reply until, after several weeks' wait in Aden, Mr. Farago sent a second message, this time adding, "Reply prepaid."

The Red Sea is, as Mr. Farago reports it, a center of international intrigue compared to which Czecho-Slovakia and Tunisia are slumber spots. Mr. Farago crossed the sea to Jibuti, whence the railway line climbs to the erstwhile Abyssinian capital of Addis Ababa; he investigated the eunuch market in Tajuri; he risked Italian gunfire off islets which the Italians are quietly fortifying; he watched the crews of Italian submarines pop up and map unoccupied but strategic bits of rock; he ran into the slave trade, and he picked up a fine crop of spy stories. Some readers may be inclined to take some of his stories with a grain of salt; but salt, after all, brings out the flavor.

Mr. Roosevelt's Plans

By Ernest K. Lindley

Paving Way For Private Life

THE PRESIDENT'S offer to give to the Nation all of his correspondence, public papers, pamphlets, books and special historical collections, was announced last Saturday so that the repository at Hyde Park might be built and equipped to receive them by January, 1941.

LINDLEY

Here, for what it is worth, is another sign that he does not expect to serve a third term. Actually it introduces nothing new into the third-term question. If Mr. Roosevelt has ever had any notion of running for a third term, his closest associates have no hint of it. Everything that he has said and done has implied that he expects to leave the Presidency in January, 1941.

But, by the early summer of 1940, when the Democratic National Convention is held, Mr. Roosevelt's intentions, expectations and personal desires may run into insurmountable obstacles. The popular demand that he seek a third term, as gauged by polls and reports through political channels, is already widespread and insistent. It is fairly certain to grow among the progressives if the old-line Democrats insist on nominating one of themselves as Mr. Roosevelt's successor. It may grow among the old-line Democrats if they find that the only alternatives are the nomination of a New Deal progressive—a "90-day Democrat" in the language of the regular politicians—or a serious split in the Roosevelt coalition.

HOW MUCH PRESSURE would be needed to draft Mr. Roosevelt for a third nomination, or whether any pressure would be heavy enough, is anybody's guess. This correspondent's guess is that even a very popular demand based only on a preference for him would be insufficient—that Mr. Roosevelt himself would have to be convinced in his own mind that his program and political philosophy would really be imperiled if he did not run again.

Although Mr. Roosevelt's proposal for the preservation of his vast store of historical material settles nothing regarding his political future, it does indicate how he intends to use part of his time when he returns to private life. He expects to assist in the maintenance and collation of this material. Undoubtedly, his own vast store will be augmented by gifts from others in his Administration, or who were associated with him in earlier days.

Mr. Roosevelt's records and those of many of his associates are voluminous. His include not only all his official papers, all his incoming correspondence, all copies of his outgoing letters, but all his chits. To an amazing degree, Mr. Roosevelt has directed his 50-ring circus by chits—brief, hand-written memoranda of only a sentence or two. The chit pad is always on his desk, and he reaches for it many times in the course of an ordinary day. These brief memoranda move out of the White House in all directions. But each of them, before it is sent, is copied on the typewriter, so that there exists a complete verbatim record of these little documents. Day by day, and almost hour by hour, especially when he has been in Washington, they show what problems have been engaging the President's attention.

BUT WITH ALL the material in the President's records, including his chits, and with all the material which may come from his Cabinet members and other subordinates, there will remain great gaps. There are no records of what was said in innumersble conversations, innumerable conferences and inpumerable talks over the telephone. These gaps can be closed partly by the notes, diaries and recollections of other parties. But, insofar as they have important bearing on his decisions, they can be closed partly by Mr. Roosevelt himself. His memory is remarkable. With an immense quantity of written material with which to keep it refreshed, he can, when he at last has the time, fill in the crevices between the written records.

Mr. Roosevelt has intimated to his friends that when he leaves the Presidency he intends to devote part of his time to writing. Almost certainly he will amplify with memoranda the records of his Administration. Very likely he will write for publication about some important episodes in his career. Perhaps in the course of time he will write his autobiography.

NOT THE LEAST of the advantages in placing the Roosevelt records in a repository at Hyde Park is that they will be where they can be amplified by the person who is best equipped to amplify them.

For nine months the President has been hectored because he authorized commercial publication of the public papers for his first term. In view of that, there is no harm in emphasizing the munificence, as well as the farsightedness, of his gift to the Nation. All the money he received and all his collaborator, Justice Samuel I. Roseman, received—after deducting their income taxes—will go into the fund to build the repository at Hyde Park. In addition, on the death of Mr. Roosevelt, the magnificent estate overlooking the Hudson will become the property of the Nation. And, finally, his collections—not only the Presidential papers, which he is entitled to keep and bequeath to his heirs, but the special private collections which he acquired out of his own funds—are worth a fortune.

State Scholarships Suggested For South's Colored Students

Comment Varies on High Court's Action Holding Restrictions Illegal; 1 Educator Asks Opening of Doors in White Colleges

Atlanta, Dec. 13 (AP).—A suggestion that States provide scholarships for colored students was offered today by a colored educator as one solution of the problem raised in the South by the Supreme Court ruling that equality of educational privileges must be accorded white and colored students.

The Supreme Court itself disregarded a scholarship plan for outside instruction for colored pupils provided by Missouri in passing on a case from that State in which a colored student sought to gain entrance into the University of Missouri Law School.

Varying views were expressed today by Southern educators regarding the best method of meeting the situation.

The colored educator, J. B. Watson, president of Arkansas Agricultural Mechanical and Normal School for Negroes at Pine Bluff, said he believed the problem could best be solved by State scholarships in institutions that admit colored students.

Among those questioned, only John Hugh Reynolds, president of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark., suggested they be admitted to white colleges.

"There probably would be trouble at first—some hot-headed Southern boy might bash a Negro's nose—but in a year or two we would get used to it," he said.

T. H. Harris, Louisiana superintendent of education, said public sentiment in the South "is decidedly against Negro and white students attending school together . . . it would be unpleasant for both."

A Virginia official, who declined to permit use of his name, said the Supreme Court decision might make mandatory widespread revisions in Virginia's segregated schooling. A department head suggested as a partial solution that a separate medical school for colored persons be established as a unit of the Medical College of Virginia and that the present State College for Negroes at Petersburg be enlarged to include most postgraduate work.

The high court decision was hailed as "in the interest of justice and the only one which could be called consistent with our democratic ideals" by Dr. William Stuart Nelson, president of Dillard University, New Orleans (colored college).

Halbert Harvill, Tennessee commissioner of education, said creation of an entirely separate school system was not advisable "under the present limited demands for such instruction."

Both Tennessee and Virginia have set up appropriations for assisting colored students to obtain professional training outside those States.

Prof. Paul Ramsey, Yale divinity student and instructor in sociology at Millsaps (Methodist) College, Jackson, Miss., said the court's decision "throws the problem right back on the South."

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University for Negroes, expressed gratification at the Supreme Court ruling and asserted that "to neglect any group only paves the way for the eventual establishment of a government which will be distinctly un-American."

State provided scholarships or establishment of separate institutions were suggested by R. B. Eleazer, of Atlanta, educational director of the commission on interracial co-operation.

Md. and D. C. Groups Seek Road Beauty

Auto Clubs to Form Committee to Fight For Sign, Restaurant Control Legislation

A program designed to rid Maryland's highways of billboards, and to provide State regulation and inspection of roadside eating establishments, was indorsed last night by Maryland and District leaders of the American Automobile Association.

Plans were set in motion, at a joint meeting of the Advisory Council of the District Motor Club and the Board of Governors of the Maryland Automobile Club, to organize a co-operative committee of the two groups and seek enactment next year by the Maryland Assembly of legislation for roadside development and control.

The District club indorsed the "uniform act," approved in the last national A. A. A. conference, under which State highway departments could set up a "protected area" extending 1,000 feet each side of highways, zone this area into commercial and non-commercial districts, and regulate road side advertisements and eating places. Under the proposed act, billboards would have to be at least 50 feet from the highway.

Senator George L. Radcliffe, (Democrat), of Maryland, declared the plan had "great merit."

Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the District Committee, called for a national movement to obtain the objectives of the A. A. A. program and declared "so long as I am in public life I shall be interested in the development of this theme."

Earlier the advisory council approved a plan of pedestrian control and asked that it be combined with a program of public education to teach driver and pedestrian their rights and obligations.

Logan Circle

The Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens' Association will fight proposals for pedestrian control at the public hearing December 29, it decided last night. H. M. Fulton was named to state the association's view.

The location of Abbott School was approved as a suitable site for the new Second Precinct Police Station.

The association voted to send an observer to the American Congress on Peace and Democracy here early next month.

Mrs. Frank M. Thompson president, presided over the meeting, which was held at her home, 1120 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Barry Farms

L. C. Hoffman, president, and Levi P. Brown, secretary, were renominated for their posts last night at the meeting of Barry Farms Citizens Association.

The unit voted support for the proposed increased playground program, and approved pedestrian control. The organization also urged that more police be detailed to school street corners in busy hours. Co-operation with the District Tuberculosis Association for the sale of Christmas seals was voted.

Burleith Citizens

What money the Burleith Citizens Association ordinarily would spend on Christmas activity will be contributed this year to the Community Chest, the association decided last night. It voted to give the Chest $25 from the association treasury and whatever other money it is able to raise among its members.

Action of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission in recommending establishment of a recreation center near Western High School was approved by the association.

S. E. Businessmen

Improvement of Southeast Washington must not stop with construction of a new Pensylvania Avenue Bridge, the Southeast Businessmen's Association declared last night in a resolution directed at the District Commissioners.

The association urged immediate removal of the garbage disposal plant at New Jersey avenue and K streets southeast, and of street car tracks on E street, betwen First and Fourth streets.

Southeast Council

Members of the Public Utility and Traffic Committee of the Southeast Council of Citizens Associations last night met with leaders of the member associations at Friendship House to study problems of pedestrian control. The committee will report to the council at a meeting Tuesday.

Purse Snatcher Beats D. C. Nurse, Gets Watch, $3

A big, roughly dressed snatch thief last night assaulted a District nurse as she was taking a short cut through an alley near her home and escaped with her pocketbook containing a $25 watch and $3 in cash.

The assailant twice smashed the woman across the face, but when she still resisted his attempts to take the purse, he punched her on the chest and knocked her almost unconscious to the ground.

The victim was Miss Elizabeth Gingrich, about 35, of 1015 Eighteenth street northwest.

She was the second nurse to be assaulted by a snatch thief within three days. Sunday, Mrs. Annie Ford, 72, of 1448 Fairmont street northwest, was cruelly beaten by a colored youth.

Two hours later the same colored man, police believe, seized the purse of Mrs. Larne Mordorst, of 2025 I street northwest, as she was walking near her home. The purse contained $8.

Youth's Crime Career to Find 'Ideal Blonde' Ends in N.Y. Jail

Eugene Corbin, 23, Held in Tombs With Companion; Admits 2 Robberies; 2 Others Are in Prison Here

An O. Henry-like tale of a crime career that began with a Virginia farmboy's dreams of finding his "ideal blonde" among Broadway's bright lights, by way of holdups in Richmond and Washington, and which abruptly ended two weeks later in Tombs prison, was revealed yesterday by District police.

Detective Sergt. Elmer Lewis, of the police robbery squad, related that Eugene Paul Corbin, 23, forferly of Dunbarton, Va., who was wanted by two States, had confessed to two armed robberies and had implicated three other men.

Two of the men he named as companions are being held in District jail indicted and charged with participating in a $300 armed robbery of a liquor store at 1211 Pensylvania avenue northwest, November 26. They are William Crosswhite, 24, of Richmond, and Robert Shapelle, 22 also of Richmond.

The third accused accomplice is Luther Myers, 27, of Richmond, who is being held with Corbin in Tombs prison, New York, in connection with the shooting of a cabman

Confession by Corbin to Sergt. Lewis was result of a "hunch" by the latter that Corbin and Myers might be the two men who had eluded Washington and Prince Georges County police in an auto chase following the robbery here.

New York police, on arresting the two men after the shooting, sent photos and descriptions to all major police headquarters. On seeing the photos, Sergt. Lewis took them to the victims of the liquor store holdup. Corbin was identified as one of the wanted men.

Disillusioned and remorseful, the Dunbarton youth poured out his story to the District detectives. Myers refused to comment.

All his adult life—a life he thought was too dull and hard—Corbin had dreamed of the day when he would be able to grace the night clubs of New York with the man-about-town's ease and meet the girl of his dreams, he told Sergt. Lewis.

He made the acquaintance of Crosswhite in Richmond, Corbin said, and the latter introduced him to Myers. The three then held up a store in Richmond November 25, he averred. They were given a ride into Washington by Shapelle

Then the four drove up to a liquor store at 1211 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, he said, and three of the men held up and robbed the owner, Ben C. Hartwig; the manager, Harry Wininger, and two customers. They escaped with about $300.

The four eluded Washington police, but were spotted near Fort Lincoln Cemetery by Prince Georges police, who gave chase over the icy highway. In Cottage City, the suspects' auto skidded into a telegrapn pole. Two men were seized; the others escaped

The fleeing duo reached the "Big City" and started making the rounds of the gayer spots, Corbin said, and they met a taxi driver who promised them even more glamorous adventures. The cabby found Corbin's dream girl, who was blonde and beautiful. But the next morning Corbin discovered that the dream girl was just that—except that she disappeared with about $500.

Broke and irate, the two then started a quarrel with the hacker, Corbin admitted, and during the fight the cabman was shot.

"The only dream I have now," said Corbin, "is of the farm in Dunbarton. But it came a little too late."

Tax Accord Hinges on Parley Today

Cleavage of Last Year on Income And Sales Levies yet To Be Composed

With lines as sharply drawn as they were last year between sponsors of an income tax and a sales tax, the District Tax Advisory Committee will meet at 10 a. m. today in a final effort to reach an agreement on a local tax program.

Although all indications are that the special investigators and the majority of the advisory committee will support the "tentative" tax plan, Dr. Charles B. Pond, the expert investigator, said:

"Anything can still happen. We aren't committeed to any tax plan yet."

A wide assortment of figures will be thrown into the discussion, with sponsors of the combine income-sales tax offering tables and charts to substantiate their contention that the sales tax is not regressive and opponents producing similar data to prove it falls hardest on the low-income group.

Board of Trade's Stand

The Board of Trade, the only large representative organization to indorse the dual tax, has prepared a table, it is understood, to show that the tax, with proposed exemptions, will run around a ½ of 1 per cent on all incomes from $800 to $10,000.

More figures will be presented by Dr. Pond, who, though willing to support any plan that appears to be a practical solution to the District revenue problem, believes that the dual tax is the best answer that has been suggested.

While members of the advisory committee have agreed to refrain from making public statements until the final vote is taken, there are strong indications that a group of income tax proponents will file a minority report if the income-sales tax plan is approved by the majority.

Committee Split Seen

Meanwhile, it appeared that the revenue sub-committee of the House District Committee, if reappointed, will divide along somewhat the same lines as it has for the past two years between the sales and income taxes.

Representative Dirksen, of Illinois, ranking Republican member, yesterday reiterated his disapproval of the sales tax and his indorsement of a graduated income tax.

He suggested that the House sub-committee be called together as early as possible to draft its own revenue bill. Last year the sub-committee ignored the findings of two tax committees set up by the District Commissioners.

Sons of Revolution Hear Bloom Laud American Liberties

Charles Colfax Long, 2558 Massachusetts avenue northwest, last night was re-elected president of the Sons of the Revolution in the District at the forty-eighth annual meeting in the Willard Hotel.

The group heard Representative Sol Bloom declare "the suppression of individual rights and liberties in many nations today sharply emphasizes the blessing enjoyed by American citizens."

Other officers elected at the meeting were Hugh M. Southgate, Charles Porterfield Light, Dion S. Birney, vice presidents; Lieut. Col. F. Granville Munson, chancellor; Edwin S. Hege, secretary; Maj. Edward F. Riggs, treasurer; Maj. Victor Vivian Martin, registrar, and the Rev. G. Freeland Peter, chaplain.

Five members of the board of managers elected were Charles F. B. Ogilby, John B. Gordon, Rear Admiral Lucius A. Bostwick, Richard W. Hinson and Maj. Raymond G. Payne.

Hygienists Split On Pre-Nuptial Blood Tests

Several Board Members Here Say Education Can Be as Effective

Should the District of Columbia have a law which would require couples to have blood tests before marriage?

The Social Hygiene Society board members are not sure, according to discussion at their meeting yesterday at 927 Fifteenth street northwest. "A number of the members still believe that public education will accomplish as much in the long run," Ray H. Everett, executive secretary, said.

Lida Usilton, statistician with the United States Public Health Service, was named to head a committee that will study the blood test laws as they are operating in the eight States which have them and to report to the society at its next meeting.

Dr. Fields Reports

The society at the meeting yesterday went on record as urging more medical social service workers for Washington hospitals and clinics. Dr. Russell Fields, health committee chairman, reported on the need, and the board in adopting his report voted to see that the case was "presented before the necessary committees of Congress."

Everett was instructed to work with the local Health Department in determining just how big an increase would be sought. He also was appointed to learn about "the health center situation."

Comment of Everett

"We understood we were to have some health centers and we are wondering what has happened them," he said. "There was to be one started for the southwest area before January 1, according to our information, and there was also talk of some PWA money for health centers. What has happened?"

Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, in answering the questions last night, said plans for the Southwest Center are completed and work will start on schedule. As for the Public Works money, he reminded that Secretary Ickes, PW Administrator, earmarked the $5,000,000, from which it was hoped a health center would result—among other things—for sewers.

Parade Opens Yule Lane On Georgia Ave.

To the music of half a dozen bands, Santa Claus last night rode up Georgia avenue northwest in a pageant opening of the annual Christmas lane, sponsored by the Park View Business Mens' Association.

Witnessed by more than 10,000 persons along Georgia avenue from Park road to Rock Creek Church road northwest, the parade marched for nearly half an hour past the reviewing stand at Princeton place.

Military and patriotic organizations, Washington Boy Scouts, and playground groups were among the marchers while business floats, ranging in size from a scooter, carrying a billboard on the handlebars, to huge decorated floats, heralded the arrival of Christmas.

The Metropolitan Police Boys Band was awarded first place among the bands, Jobs Daughters of Anacostia was judged the best marching unit, and the streamlined display of the Heinz Co. was the prize-winning float. Judges were Fairfax Oyster, president of the Federation of Business Mens' Association; Theodore S. Grape, past president, and Julian Cordin, president of the Northeast Business Men's Association. Others in the reviewing stand included Max Schwartz, president of the Park View Association; William Gary, president of the Fourteenth Street Business Men's Association, and Bill Mailian, of the Central Business Men's Association.

Among the marching units were the Marine Reserves with their band, A. A. A. schoolboy patrols, Fort Stevens Post, American Legion, drum and bugle corps, Holy Comforter's Boys' Band, children from the Parkview Playground, Sons of the American Legion Band, Elk's Boys' Band, Boy Scout Drum and Bugle Corps No. 49, and the Elk's Columbia Lodge Band

Hearing Set On $2,000,000 For Memorial

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the House sub-committee on independent offices appropriations, yesterday announced that hearings will be held next Wednesday on an application for additional funds for construction of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial.

President Roosevelt is scheduled to speak and possibly turn the first spadeful of earth when ground is broken for the monument at the Tidal Basin tomorrow afternoon.

It was learned that the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission is requesting $2,000,000 to continue the project. Its application has been approved by the President and the Budget Bureau.

Nolan Studies Way to Stop Bail Jumping

Confers With Law Enforcers After Ohio Ex-Convict Escaped On Bond of $1,000

The practice of releasing prisoners on bond before their police records have been investigated will be discussed today by local law enforcement officials and Dr. James A. Nolan, managing director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association.

Dr. Nolan said last night that the practice was one which "very definitely" should be stopped. He will talk with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of Metropolitan Police, and District Attorney David A. Pine.

Pointing out that "the matter of fingerprinting and photographing persons arrested for crime is a police problem," Pine told The Post last night that he had "instructed assistants in the police court to be extra alert to get a full report when there is reason to believe that men brought up for arraignment are wanted elsewhere."

Intends No Foul Blows

Pine added that he must bear in mind "the constitutional limitations that restrict the District Attorney and everyone else" in connection with releasing on bail persons charged with crime. He declared that "we intend to hit hard blows against law violators but we don't intend to hit foul blows."

The case which intensified efforts to curb the practice was that of George Miller, who Monday jumped $1,000 bond and failed to appear in Police Court on charges of carrying concealed weapons.

Escaped Convict Flees

Miller was arrested November 15 with two other men who lived at the same address in the 3700 block of W street northwest. The two others were released on $500 bond each, and appeared in court Monday. One admitted ownership of the gun and was sentenced to pay $75 fine or serve 30 days.

But Miller, who had been released a few hours after his arrest, apparently left town immediately.

Shortly after his release the Department of Justice notified local police that Miller was an escaped convict of an Ohio prison where he had been serving time for holdup, and was wanted in New York City in connection with a jewel robbery.

During the past year the Justice Association made an exhaustive study of the bail bond situation and among nine recommendations was one that persons charged with felonies or serious misdemeanors should not be released until fingerprints have been taken and their previous criminal record, if any, looked over.

Bride, 15, Cries as She's Locked in Jail Here After Eloping to Alexandria With Plumber, 30

A 15-year-old Maryland schoolgirl, crying for permission to remain with her bridegroom of a day—a man 15 years older—was jailed by Washington police last night as a fugitive from her parents.

The girl, Josephine Katherine Maguire, of North Beach, Md., disappeared Monday from her classroom at the Prince Frederick High School and later in the day was married in Alexandria, Va., to Walter Poetzman, 30, a Washington plumber.

Among the sudden influx of couples who swamped the Alexandria marriage license bureau just before closing time Monday, Miss Maguire and Poetzman secured their license with little difficulty. The girl gave her age as 21. They were married by Justice of the Peace Herman Friedlander.

Word of the girl's disappearance came to Washington police yesterday in a request from Maryland authorities to hold her as a fugitive. Poetzman, who appeared at police headquarters last night to plead for his bride's freedom, was not held. Police said they would take no action against him pending further information from Maryland.

Miss Maguire, a pretty brunette, said she willingly married Poetzman and was not "abducted" as was at first believed.

"I love Walter and intend to stick by him," said the girl. "We had planned a long time to be married, and my father knew it."

The couple tried to get a marriage license Saturday at Marlboro, Md., but were balked by Maryland's 48-hour law, said the girl.

Poetzman, she said, went to Alexandria Monday and learned that his prospective bride also would have to appear in person before a license would be issued.

He sent two friends—a man and a woman—to Josephine's classroom in the Prince Frederick High School with word that her mother was sick and she must leave at once, according to police.

The girl left and was taken directly to Alexandria, where the ceremony was performed several hours later. Willis White, principal of the school, communicated with Josephine's parents and found her mother not ill. It was then that Maryland State police were notified of her disappearance.

Acting on information received in Alexandria, local detectives went to a boarding house in the 1100 block of Tenth street northeast yesterday and took the girl into custody. Poetzman was working and hurried to headquarters after returning to the bording house.

Mrs. Myrtle Maguire, the bride's mother, said last night she and her husband, a North Beach carpenter, has "not decided what action to take." She said Poetzman had been a friend of the family for more than three years.

Meanwhile, the issuance of licenses showed a decided drop yesterday, there being only ten licenses issued as against 33 on Saturday and 28 Monday.

According to Elliott F. Hoffman, clerk of the court, two applications were refused, one because the bride-elect was under age and her guardian, who accompanied her, had not been duly appointed by the court. In the other case the prospective bride appeared unaccompanied by the prospective bridegroom. She explained that she wished to fill out her portion of the application blank and that her fiance would come to Alexandria later and complete it. Hoffman explained that both parties to the application must appear together before him.

Vatican Fears Nazi Outbreak 'Momentarily'

Drastic Law Drafted To End Concordat, Catholic Paper Says

Rome (Wednesday), Dec. 14 (U.P.). It was learned reliably today that the Vatican considers the Catholic church has reached a position in Germany of such gravity that "the worst is expected momentarily."

This opinion is based on press reports of a new German law which has been drafted, embodying eight provisions of the utmost severity, and which the Vatican believes may be passed by the Reichstag at any time.

It was emphasized that the Vatican so far has not received official information regarding the reported pending anti-church legislation in Germany.

However, last night's Osservatore Romano quoted the Luxembourger Wort, a Catholic conservative newspaper, listing eight provisions of the reported legislation as follows:

Abrogation of the 1933 concordat with the Vatican.

Ban on religious propaganda in Germany, whether carried out by special masses, processions or pilgrimages.

Immediate dissolution of religious bodies whose members are guilty of immorality and confiscation of their possessions.

Correspondence between the Pope and German bishops to be examined by the German government before delivery.

Ban on religious orders teaching or helping the sick.

Ban on contributions by Germans to church or religious orders.

Bon on priests baptizing Jews and on "non-Aryan" Germans becoming priests.

Church membership to be declared spontaneously by German citizens, in default of which they would not be considered to be members of any religious denomination.

Dies Labels Harboring of Aliens 'Scandal'

By the Associated Press.

Representative Dies (Democrat), Texas, said last night that "failure" of the Labor Department to deport Communists, Fascists and Nazi aliens "is becoming a national scandal."

The chairman of the House committee investigating un-American activities, made the statement in a radio address (N. B. C.) summarizing the work of the committee.

Speaking directly to the Labor Department, with which he has been in frequent controversy, Dies said:

"Let me urge that you promptly deport the Communists, Fascists and Nazi aliens in this country. A large part of the un-American activities in this country is carried on by these aliens. The failure to deport them is becoming a national scandal.

Dies made this suggestion to those persons who "think more of Russia, Germany, Italy or some other foreign country" than the United States:

"I suggest that the honest and decent thing for you to do is to book an early passage to the country of your affection—there is no place in America for you."

The committee's life will end January 2, the day before the new Congress convenes. In an interview earlier yesterday, Dies said he would introduce legislation to recreate the committee and would seek a $200,000 appropriation for it. It received $25,000 from the last Congress.

Give Us Roosevelt, Take Lady Astor, Writer Urges

Portland, Me., Dec. 13 (AP).—Phyllis Bottome, English novelist, told a women's literary club here today, she would be "very grateful" if the United States would "take back your Lady Astor and give us your President."

The Virginia-born wife of Viscount Astor, she declared, supplies the money that "runs the London Times and for three years that newspaper has been forcing Hitler and Mussolini down our throats."

Coast Guard Sends Aid As Ship Catches Afire

Miami, Fla., Dec. 13 (U.P.).—Coast Guard headquarters here reported tonight that the cutter Pandora and a pilot had been sent out in response to a distress call from the Southern Pacific Line's steamship, El Mundo, which radioed she had a fire in her hold.

Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris

New Year's Eve gayeties in the Hotel Hamilton's bright Rainbow Room will go on and on through the first four or five hours of 1939, Saturday or no Saturday.

The Rainbow Room's orchestra, headed by Milton Davis, will play for dancing until 4 o'clock in the morning of January 1. There will be handsome souvenirs, many fripperies and noise-makers, all in the best tradition of a Happy New Year's. The party will be limited to 400, which is about all that can be accommodated in the Rainbow Room without overcrowding. The price for all this good time will be lower than it has been in years.

La Conga, primitive dance of the tropics, has made its official advent in the Shoreham Blue Room along with Jose Dominguez and his Cuban rhythm. The entire Dominguez Orchestra, led by Jose and Dancer Norma Gallo, also Fontana and Bettine, circle the dance floor in an authentic La Conga.

Blue Room dancers found the new Dominguez music very stimulating, took to it in practically no time. And don't think that you have to do the tango or the rumba to dance to Latin-American music. Just get out there and let your feet do their stuff. You'll get on splendidly.

By accident or design the Dominguez Orchestra looks like a Diego de Rivera mural on the bandstand. The ballooning ruffles of their blue blouses match the Blue Room walls, their rose-scarlet scarfs provide a handsome slash of color. Barnee gave a fine greeting to the Cubans before the dancing started on a proportion of 15 minutes of the Barnee-directed Shoreham music alternating with ten minutes of Cuban rhythm.

What they're thinking about: Peggy Townsend, we understand, is wondering how she'll crowd her debut party on December 22 and her nightly nightingaling at the Cafe Caprice into the same 24 hours.

Sanda Williams (Shar-Zad) is figuring out a series of New Year's Eve shenanigans that will top even his happily remembered Halloween circus.

Frances Chapman, Anchor Room's own Christmas spirit, is reading newspaper ads, puzzling over just what gifts to send to her friends and relatives back in Texas.

Harold Veo, director of the Mayflower Lounge Orchestra, occasionally wears a semiabstracted look because the back of his mind is occupied with the composition and harmonies of his new violin concerto.

Madrillon's Johnny Shaw smiles happily as he remembers how the management of "Pins and Needles" congratulated him on being the only orchestra leader in town playing the hit songs from this top-flight revue.

Mayfair's soothsayer, the Countess de Bournet, after gazing steadily into a glass of ice water used as a crystal, drags up from her subconscious mind the past and future of Mayfair's patrons.

Those three horses of Troika's painted troika have a significance.

FONTANA AND BETTINE,
dancers of international note who are at the Shoreham for another week.

The white horse stands for hope, the red one for love and the black steed for despair. The Russian legend has it that the first troika was evolved when an extra horse was added to a team to aid the speed of an elopement. The extra horse was the black one (despair) evidently, because her husband caught up with them.

Wednesday Specials: At Hour Glass this afternoon: Style parade of Patou negligees and tea gowns. Beautiful mannequins will parade across the top of the bar. The Hour Glass barmen are dizzy for days after these events.

At the Pall Mall Room this evening: Special appearance of the Marion Venable dancers, including Marion Venable, Paul Fox and several others. They will appear at both dinner and supper shows.

"Jitterbug" dancing and waltzing on a bicycle are two surprising and highly diverting novelties offered in this week's Bamboo Gardens' floor revue, Finney and Rogers, a likely pair of youngsters, are the "jitterbugs." They truck, peck and Susie-Q with a youthful effervescence that's refreshing. Will Lacey, a veteran of the circus, does waltzing, juggling and violin playing, all while riding his unicycle (one-wheel bicycle). They say Mr. Lacey's around 50, but he looks 35, proving that circus stunts keep one young. Jimmy Walker and the Henderson Dancers are held over. Note—Al Norton will make holiday radio appearances with Gordon Hittenmark.

That highly refreshing and reviving Lounge Riviera special cocktail is made of Scotch whisky, vermouth and an old Scotch liqueur. It's the creation of Riviera's veteran and expert bartender, Patrick Quinn. (But wouldn't you have expected Patrick to use Irish whisky?)

Elaine Seidler and her Park Avenue Debutantes, now at the Lotus, offer dance parades in the manner gorgeous. Elaine leads the orchestra while the girls step out in costumes of feathers that must have cost too much. Topping this crew of beauties is a sumptuous blonde decorated with plumes of midnight black. The Ramos offer Latin-American dances and Harry and Betty Howard, fresh from Australia, offer comedy literally punctuated by screams.

The Paul Kain Orchestra (Metronome Room) have been selected as stand-by orchestra for WJSV since they came to town a few days ago. So now you're likely to hear Kain music at any hour of the day or night.

LeRoy Mark, Head of WOL, Is Dead at 61

Radio Executive Also Directed Insurance Company in Capital

LeRoy Mark, president of Radio Station WOL and a leading figure in business and entertainment circles here for many years, died last night in his residence at 3520 Thirt-seventh street northwest.

Besides heading the local station of the Mutual Broadcasting System, Mr. Mark was president of LeRoy Mark, Inc., insurance firm with offices in the Colorado Building.

Funeral Services Friday

Mr. Mark was 61 years old. He had been in failing health for about two years. Confined to his home since August, he continued to supervise his enterprises by telephone.

Funeral services will be held Friday at the Gawler funeral home, 1756 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Mr. Mark was born in Washington, February 21, 1877. His father was the late George Mark, assistant Librarian of Congress from 1867 to 1887. He was educated in the public schools of the District and at the Columbia University Law School, where he was graduated in 1899.

Won Station More Power

The radio station was established in 1927 and for many years operated under the handicap of the relatively low power allotted it by the then Federal Radio Commission. Last October after a long fight, Mr. Mark and his associates succeeded in obtaining a grant of increased power from the Federal Communications Commission. The station's transmitter was transferred from its old location in the top of the Annapolis Hotel to Chillum, Md.

The station was the first to introduce to Washington audiences the now famous team of "Amos n' Andy." It originated the "Musical Clock" program, now broadcast over a national network.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen Shaffer Mark, a native of Franklin, Pa., and four children, Helen, Mary and Dale Mark, of Washington, and John Mark, of Cleveland.

William S. Hill, Banker, Dies

William Henry Sasscer Hill, 71-year-old "squire" of the historic estate of Pleasant Hills, near Upper Marlboro, Md., died yesterday at his home, after a serious illness of two months.

Member of one o fthe oldest families in Prince Georges County, Mr. Hill was vice president and cashier of the First National Bank at Upper Marlboro.

The house in which he died was built 150 years ago by his grandfather.

Mr. Hill was active in school and church affairs. He was vestryman, treasurer and junior warden of Trinity Church.

Before entering the banking business 40 year ago, Mr. Hill taught at the Marlboro Academy, where he was educated. He was county treasurer of the American Red Cross and was a director of the Maryland Tobacco Growers Association.

Mr. Hill was a first cousin of State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Governor.

Survivors include his wife, a son, William S. Hill, jr.; a daughter, Alice Elizabeth Hill, both of Washington, and four sisters, Misses Margaret, Marie, May, and Fredricka Hill, all of Upper Marlboro.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 3 p. m. at the Trinity Episcopal Church. Burial will be in the Trinity churchyard.

Funeral Today At Takoma Park For Mrs. Avery

Funeral services for Mrs. Florence M. Avery, 60, who died of a heart attack Monday at her home, 113 Baltimore avenue, Takoma Park, Md., will be held today at 2 p. m. at the Gawler funeral home, Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest. The Rev. R. Paul Schearrer, pastor of the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, will officiate. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Mrs. Avery, wife of the late Harry E. Avery, of Washington, was born in London and came here when she was 10 years old. She was the daughter of the late Albert Henson, prominent Washington builder who helped build the Wardman Park Hotel.

Mrs. Avery belonged to the Acacia Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, and was an active worker at the Church of the Covenant in Washington.

Mother's Standby in Treating CHILDREN'S Frequent COLDS

If your children keep coming down with nasty little colds all winter, use Vicks VapoRub these three simple ways.

✓ For relieving discomforts of chest colds and night cough, rub VapoRub on throat, chest and back at bedtime. VapoRub's poultice-vapor action relieves local congestion—eases muscular soreness or tightness—helps the youngster relax into restful sleep.

✓ For coughing and irritated throat caused by colds, put VapoRub on the child's tongue. It melts, trickles slowly down—bathes the throat with soothing medication. Then massage VapoRub on throat and chest.

✓ For "sniffles" and misery of head colds, melt a spoonful of VapoRub in a bowl of boiling water. Have the child breathe in the steaming vapors. This loosens phlegm, clears air-passages, makes breathing easier. Also massage VapoRub on throat and chest. Millions of families use these three time-tested ways to relieve the misery of colds.

3 Are Suspected In Poison Deaths

Philadelphia, Dec. 13 (AP).—Coroner Charles S. Hersch said tonight poison had been found in two bodies recently exhumed, and that the bodies of three other suspected victims of an insurance-poisioning plot would be examined.

Three persons are under arrest, he said, on charges of suspicion of homicide.

Billion Jump in U. S. Spending Seen by King

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, member of the Senate finance committee, said last night he expected Government appropriations for the next fiscal year to be $1,000,000,000 above those of the current year.

He declared the present plans of Government departments, with the increased budget for national defense, would make necessary increased taxes.

Mundelein Scored By Hitler's Paper

Berlin, Dec. 13 (AP).—Nazidom's chief mouthpiece, the Voelkischer Beobachter, attacked personally George Cardinal Mundelein today as the aider and abettor of Jewry.

The attack by Reichsfuehrer Hitler's paper was in a first page account of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin's retort to Cardinal Mundelein that individual bishops or cardinals have no right to speak in the name of the whole Catholic church.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Welcomed by a large audience that left but few seats vacant in Constitution Hall last evening, Sergei Rakmaninov returned the compliment by playing his piano recital at the peak of his interpretative and technical finesse.

There have been occasions when his detachment left his performance brittle and coldly sparkling, but this was not one of them. He was in a communicative mood, ready and willing to reveal his own emotional response to the music, and there was not an arid moment in his program. Brilliance there was in plenty on the executive side, but the readings were all charged with poetic eloquence

He began with the two great contemporaries of the early eighteenth century, Jean Philippe Rameau and Johann Sebastian Bach, the former represented by the Theme and Variations in A minor, and the latter by the E minor Toccata. The juxtaposition of the French and German masters demonstrated the cosmopolitan character of the epoch, for beneath the superficial differences in style lay a common ground of musical understanding. The Gallic "ornaments" of Rameau and the Teutonic sturdiness of Bach could not disguise their fundamental agreement in principles.

After this classical excursion, Rakhmaninov proceeded with Beethoven's E flat major Sonata, the one in that key which bears the descriptive title, "Das Lebewohl." It was played with a sensitiveness that evoked all its emotional shades and with a technical mastery that turned its difficulties into delicacies. This was followed by Schubert's A flat major Impromptu, so prophetic of Chopin, and an unfamiliar Rondo by the same composer.

After the intermission, Rakhmaninov prefaced with his own G major prelude, a fascinating performance of 12 of Chopin's preludes. This was Chopin playing of rare quality and intuitive perception, so instinct with poesy and so thoroughly satisfying that the auditors absorbed it eagerly, without once interrupting with applause between the pieces.

As a finale came two excepts from Liszt's second set of "Annees de Pelerinage;" the "Sonetto 104 del Petrarca" and the Tarantella from "Venezia e Napoli." So many pianists stress the melodramatic elements in Liszt that it was a relief and a pleasure to hear the essential Liszt emerge.

At the close of the recital the auditors showed no sign that they expected to leave without a parting gift of extra numbers. They were not disappointed, for their recalling applause was rewarded with three of Rakhmaninov's compositions: one of the Etude-Tableaux, the "Polichinelle" and—yes—the C sharp minor prelude.

Warner Houses Inaugurate Patriotic Policy; Dickens' 'Christmas Carol' Dominates Yule; News and Gossip of Amusements

THERE has been discussion of it, pro and con, for quite some time now, but it has remained for Zone Manager John J. Payette, of the Warner Brothers interests in the Washington territory, to inaugurate the innovation as a fixed part of house policy in the theaters under his control in the National Capital. I mean the playing of the national anthem at the beginning of the first daily performance and again at the close of the last.

BELL

According to announcement made yesterday, "The Star-Spangled Banner" is played at the beginning of the first show and at the conclusion of the last show in all Warner Brothers' theaters in Washington. In the neighborhood houses which close over the dinner hour, between matinee and night schedules, the national anthem is played before and after the afternoon performances and again before and after the night bills.

One verse of "The Star-Spangled Banner" is flashed upon the screen. The American flag is shown in Technicolor and beneath the flag the words of the first verse are presented. Since the inauguration of this patriotic gesture, many patrons are said to have complimented the Warner house managements on the presentation of the national anthem as an accent on Americanism.

In view of the encroachment of all manner of foreign ideologies of government upon the American scene, the activity of alien minorities "boring from within" and the general temper of the times, a little emphasis on the many blessings symbolized by the Red, White and Blue seems not to come untimely or amiss.

This column has no way of knowing in how many other cities motion picture programs may be opened and closed with the playing—and possibly singing—of "The Star-Spangled Banner," but it welcomes the practice here for its value as a reminder that "Americanism" stands for the best there is on the face of the earth today in the matter of democracy and freedom.

It has long been the custom, I believe, for theaters in England to open and close theatrical performances with the familiar strains of "God Save the King." Heretofore, it has been the practice in Washington to play the national anthem only when the President of the United States has attended the play, or on infrequent occasions of comparable importance.

The practice should be universal—and probably will become so, now that the ice is broken.

New Theater—New Managers

The Warner Brothers' new Beverly Theater, located on Fifteenth street, northeast, between Tennessee avenue and E street, while we are on the topic, will open its doors to the public on Friday evening, December 23. Described as a "sister" theater to the same company's Penn, Sheridan, Uptown and Calvert theaters, the Beverly will have a seating capacity of 1,000 on one floor. It was designed by John Eberson, noted architect and will be operated by the Warner organization under a long-term lease executed with the Kass Realty Co., owners and builders. The opening of the Beverly will occasion the following managerial changes, in line with the company policy of promotion from the ranks: Arthur Kilburg will be shifted from the managership of the Apollo Theater to the Beverly; Sidney Hoffman from the Home to the Apollo; Clyde Abell, from assistant manager of the Earle to manager of the Home; Ernest Wells, from treasurer to assistant manager of the Earle; Arthur Molle from Earle chief of service to treasurer; Alfred Gibbons, from Colony student manager to assistant manager of the Beverly; James Bott, student manager, from Seco to Colony; William Forney, Sheridan chief of service to student manager at Seco; William McDermott, captain of ushers at the Uptown, to chief of service at Beverly; George Colliflower, Calvert captain of ushers, to chief of service at Penn; Frank Hames, captain of ushers at Silver, to chief of service at Calvert; Carlton Robinson, captain of ushers at the Sheridan to chief of service.

This column's proxy, Mr. Coe, reports that it was something of a shock to the drama desks, when they reached the street after the preview screening of "A Christmas Carol" yesterday afternoon, to find that Christmas is still nearly two weeks away. One felt, he said, that at the very earliest it should have been Christmas Eve. That there were no panhandlers on the street only added to the misfortune of those unfortunates. They would have made a cheering haul, for the boys and girls of the drayma desks were pretty violently Yule-minded.

That, of course, was to have been expected, for the screening only corroborated the advance rumors that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has made a faithful screen transcription of probably the most deeply beloved of all the Christmas stories. Ebenezer Scrooge is played by Reginald Owen, Tiny Tim by that prodigious youngster from "Lord Jeff," Terry Kilburn and the Cratchit Family by the Lockhart family That is to say, the Cratchits are impersonated by Gene and Kathleen Lockhart and their little daughter, June, all three of whom have appeared in the play years on end in their home for the entertainment of the neighborhood. This bit of casting no doubt establishes a record of some kind.

At any rate, you will see an admirable picturization of Dickens' Yuletide classic when "A Christmas Carol" opens on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday—or so Mr. Coe tells me, and Mr. Coe is a young man of discriminating judgment in such things.

How Old Is Your "Christmas Carol?"

The Loew management, by the way, has fallen victim to an interesting curiosity with regard to "A Christmas Carol." Realizing that millions of readers have enjoyed it down the years and that it is as much a part of Christmas as roast turkey and trimmings, holly wreaths, evergreen trees, tinsel and glitter, the Loew executives are anxious to know who owns the oldest copy of "A Christmas Carol" in Washington. Are you among those who cherish a yellowing copy of this beloved tale? Have you an interesting story of your acquisition of the book and the degree to which it has been poured over, year after year, by the members of your family? If you will acquaint the Capitol management with the age of your copy and other pertinent facts concerning it, you may be among those who will be invited to attend a performance of the picture as a guest of the house.

Speaking of "A Christmas Carol"—and there seems to be no end to it—it has been the custom for many years for the President and Mrs. Roosevelt to read the Dickens' story at the family gathering of their children and grandchildren each Christmas-time. This year, however, on the afternoon of Thursday, December 29, at the invitation of Mrs. Roosevelt, the Portillo Marionette Company will present "A Christmas Carol" at the White House, as adapted by George Vivian, director of S. E. Cochran's National Academy of Stage Training. Mr. Vivian also will manipulate the character of Scrooge.

For several years, patrons of RKO-Keith's Theater in this city have been purchasing strips of admission tickets to present to their friends as Christmas gifts. The idea now has spread to the entire national chain of RKO houses and the tickets are available in attractive booklets of two denominations—$3 and $5. These tickets are good at any RKO theater in the United States and now are obtainable at the RKO-Keith boxoffice, for the convenience of those still wrestling with their gift lists.

The Center of the 'Assembly Line of Beauty'

A FUTURISTIC BIT OF CELLULOID OPULENCE as it is revealed in Paramount's forthcoming production of "Artists Models Abroad," starring Jack Benny, Joan Bennett, Mary Boland and the Yacht Club Boys. This is the heart of the set on which beauties are "assembled," after the manner of a motor car on the production line. The French Republican Guards are merely present to protect the Napoleonic jewels, presided over by the 16-foot head of whoever it is

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 13.—When I dashed into the private office of Paramount's dance creator, LeRoy Prinz, to get a phone call I thought I'd stepped into another war. It was filled with deadly weapons, knives, sabers, guns, cannon, aeroplanes. Naturally my question was, "How come?"

HEDDA HOPPER

And Le Roy, who must be all of 5 feet, said, "Well, you see, Elsie Janis picked me to stage some numbers for her in the trenches when she saw me win a flyweight contest with another soldier. These are my memories. I liked dancing better than boxing and when the war was over I created numbers for New York shows.

"And eight years ago, while Elsie was working with DeMille, she suggested me—I've been here ever since."

On his wall he has discharges from the Foreign Legion, the United States Cavalry and the United States Air Force. There's also a picture of Quentin Roosevelt beside his plane. And Le Roy told this interesting yarn about a framed map that was taken from him when he was a German prisoner. It was returned 17 years later by a German mother who read his name in the paper—observing it to be the same as that on the map. However she thought she was sending it to Le Roy's son!

I noticed, too, a picture of Richard Byrd and flag he took with him to the South Pole. Le Roy has a table full of toy aeroplanes made by his best friend, a boy of 12, who only has one eye. The lad, hearing Le Roy was a flyer, wanted to discuss planes. Le Roy financed him, the boy took up designing and now he's working for the biggest model plane manufacturing company here. On his desk was a photo of his daughter, 8, who's a marvelous dancer and she—of all things—hates dancing!

Frances Lederer, after four years, has given up work on his peace plan. The Ludlow bill, which was virtually the same thing Francis was fighting for, was not to send American soldiers to fight on foreign soil, except by popular vote. As you know, that bill was shelved. Francis told me that soon after he started his plan, a big Hollywood writer said he had insulted all actors because he had taken an active interest in other things besides acting.

If that's true, I wonder what it will do for Melvyn Douglas? We're so contrary he'll probably be the next Governor. But Francis wants us to gain a true realization of the benefits of democracy. That is our only salvation. And this man is not yet an American citizen!

Bing Crosby, Walt Disney and a few others dreamed up (over a cup of Java) that Hollywood edition of Madison Square Garden which is about to rise at Third and Fairfax and have engaged Zack Farmer to manage it. He's the man who did such a swell job of running the 1932 Olympics. Now if they can arrange it so it can be converted into an opera house as well as a place for elephants, prize fights, six-day bike races—we'll all be happy!

Mary MacLaren asked to meet Astrologist Myra Kingsley. Myra, done up in a real Turk's fez, looked stunning. It seems another astrologist had told Mary she was going to make a comeback in the movies. Myra, asking for her dates, oked the other's predictions. I hope they're both right.

Guess what the main attraction was at Andrea Segurolas' birthday party for Deanne Durbin—a hot seat. It had the young generation in stitches. The Durbin family hasn't been so lucky. Eight months ago, Mrs. Durbin fell into a fish pond and injured her arm. Some weeks later she was thrown through the windshield of her car, smashing her nose. Last week, Mr. Durbin applied the brakes at Hollywood and Vine, only there weren't any—he went into the back of a truck. No injury, no score, only damage.

Bryant Washburn was the first star to admit he was happily married and the father of two children. That was in the dark ages of 1916. He and the mother of those children are both on the set of "Midnight"—the youngest looking grandparents hereabout.

This is the seventeenth Christmas Cameraman Ollie Marsh and Bob Leonard will celebrate together. They started in Havana with "Fascination." Woo-woo! They're still at it—"Pop" Leonard has to be restrained—he tries to Santa Claus the world.

Carole Lombard pulled the classic of the week when she walked into Sam Goldwyn's office, slapped him on the back and said: "Congratulations, Sam, on getting Jimmy Roosevelt. When do you take over the fireside chats?"

Bickford South Sea Island Up for Sale

Charles Bickford recently offered for sale an 80-acre island in the South Seas which he purchased eight years ago and has never seen since. Furthermore, he never expects to see it again.

The island is one of many in the Sundra group off the coast of Java, is under Dutch rule and the taxes amount to about 10 cents a year, the actor states. While working in "Stand Up and Fight," he has been trying to interest Wallace Beery, Robert Taylor and Director W. S. Van Dyke in the property, but so far has had no takers.

Xmas Spirit Is Lacking From Court Docket

Hollywood Stars Are Deep in Litigation Over This and That

By Frederick C. Othman,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Hollywood, Dec. 13.—This is supposed to be the season of peace and good will toward men, but you'd never know it to look at today's Hollywood court docket. Everybody seems to be suing everybody else, with charges running all the way from swindle to attempted murder.

Courts were jammed with assorted entertainment personalities, such as Martin (Moe, "The Gimp") Snyder, Ruth Etting, Eddie Cantor, Osa Johnson, Vera Reynolds, Tom Mix, Ben Blue and Mrs. Feodor Chalapin. Scheduled for trial soon were other actions involving Jackie Coogan, Constance Bennett, Sally Rand, Stan Laurel, Hal Roach, C. Aubrey Smith, and probably some others we've overlooked. Merry Christmas everybody.

Big trial of the week involves Miss Etting, the blues singer who got her first theatrical break by singing in a second-rate Chicago night club. Then she married "The Gimp," so-called by his cronies because he limped, and they lived together for 17 years. Eventually she divorced him and settled in Hollywood. She charged last year that the jealous Gimp had threatened to kill her. Police assigned a guard for several days.

Charged With Kidnaping

Then a few weeks ago, "The Gimp" was charged with kidnaping Myrl Alderman, Miss Etting's accompanist. Miss Etting said she wrested a revolver away from "The Gimp" and called police.

Eddie Cantor's appearance in court involves his 17-year-old daughter, Marilyn, charged with smashing into the car of Mrs. Morris Levine and injuring her. Mrs. Levine wants $20,192 damages.

Mrs. Johnson, wife of the late explorer, seeks $700,000 from the airline whose plane smashed into a mountainside last January a year ago and killed her husband. Ben Blue was enjoined from getting a final divorce from his wife until he pays up his back alimoney, which she said he promised to pay at the rate of $1,000 a month.

Tom Mix and his ex-wife, now married to a South American diplomat, are tangling over $50,000 she claims the movie cowboy owes her. The first wife of the late Feodor Chaliapin, in an action filed from her home in Russia, sought $100,000 worth of Beverly Hills real estate the famous singer left.

Coogan Wants $4,000,000

Jackie Coogan's suit against his step-father and mother for the $4,000,000 he claimed he earned as a baby movie star but never received, reaches court in the next few days. So does the suit of the perennially court-battling Constance Bennett, who charges a radio commentator with libel, but the trial is to be postponed because Miss Bennett is in Europe

Sally Rand, only out of court a month after being convicted of biting a customer on the arm because the latter snapped a picture of her in the almost altogether, returns to answer the suit of Faith Bacon. Miss Bacon charges that she and she alone invented the fan dance and that Sally swiped it. Miss Bacon asked part of the several million dollars Sally is reputed to have earned by waving a fan under the dim blue lights of American vaudeville stages.

Laurel is suing Roach for breach of contract. The Small Co., theatrical agents, asked superior court to help collect $10,900 from C. Aubrey Smith, one of the best-known Britishers in the films.

Only cheerful, Christmasy news to come from the courts involves Miss Reynolds, one of the best known of the silent film stars. She filed suit for divorce from Robert Reel, movie scenarist. Then she asked the judge would he please call it all off. She said she'd decided that she still loved Reel. The amazed judge was glad to comply. He even bought a holly wreath to hang on the courtroom door.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Dec. 13.

ANTHONY EDEN received a telegram Saturday from Wesley Ruggles, the film director, offering him a movie job. "Thank you very much for your kind offer," Eden replied, "but I am still in his majesty's service . . . Sid Luckman, despite his announcement, will play pro football next year. He's waiting for the Giants or Dodgers to buy the draft rights to his services.

EVA KOPALCHUCK, the 15-year-old girl who shot and killed her mother last month, will apply to be released from the Tombs for one day this week. Her stepfather, Silimon Tiatak, died at the City Hospital yesterday, and she wants to attend his funeral.

WHEN SAM GOLDWYN announced that James Roosevelt would work for him, a reporter phoned Roosevelt and asked what his film duties would be . . . "I don't know," Jimmy confessed. "That's up to Mr. Goldwyn" . . . The reporter phoned Goldwyn and asked: "What's Jimmy Roosevelt going to do for you?" . . . Goldwyn replied: "I don't know what he's going to do—but he's going to do his best."

MRS. TONY CANZONERI now is auditioning for her first drama role. She's using the name "Rita Roberta" . . . The Leif Erickson scenes in Paramount's "Ride a Crooked Mule" had to be retaken because Erickson had been wearing his Abraham Lincoln Brigade pin—which looked too prominent on the screen . . . When Tulio Carminati, of "Great Lady," was told that he couldn't be given a blue jacket to wear in one scene—because it might disrupt the color schemes—Carminati called a psychiatrist to help soothe his anger.

POULTRY MAGAZINE reprinted an article by "B. K. Akward." That's one of the censorable pen-names adopted by the real author—Heywood Broun . . . Mildred Harris, the former Mrs. Charles Chaplin, will sing at Butler's Tap Room . . . Some of the New York cafe owners whose records are questionable have been summoned to Dewey's office to tell just how they managed to obtain liquor licenses.

PEGGY BADEY, the model, checked her hooped skirt at the El Morocco powder room because it interfered with her dancing last night. A Life cameraman photographed the event . . . Noel Coward brought Mrs. Anthony Eden to the Stork Club at 1 o'clock this morning to show her the real New York night life. Ten minutes after they left they missed seeing the real night life, when four cops helped throw a Yale footballer out of the place . . . Because all film studios wouldn't permit Leni Reifenstahl to see how they make movies and because her hotel was being picketed for housing her, Miss Reifenstahl left Hollywood and now is on a ranch near Mexico.

LAST WEEK, when Davey O'Brien—Texas Christian's All-America back—came to New York to receive a trophy, Caswell Adams, of the Herald Tribune sports staff, reported: "O'Brien's plane was grounded in Washington, and so Davey arrived by that old-fashioned contraption—the railroad train" . . . The next day the New York Central Railroad's Mr. Crowley phoned Mrs. Ogden Reid—to squawk. Mrs. Reid, before hanging up, told him: "The trouble with railroads is—they have no sense of humor."

TOMMY CORCORAN, already working on the delegates for the '40 convention, has told the President that $100,000,000 will be spent at that time to lick the New Deal . . . One of the first phases of Special Prosecutor Amen's bail-bond investigation will be directed at a mother-and-son combination, who have a monopoly on most of the business.

GYPSY ROSE LEE first received the news that her name had been mentioned in the Dies investigation, while she was appearing in Columbus, Ohio . . . Congressman Mosier telephoned her and identified himself . . . "Hi'ya, Mosie," Gypsy greeted, refusing to believe it was true . . . The country's best known strip-teaser later was told about the Dies committee's investigation of Hollywood. "The committee needs $200,000 to continue its work. Have you any ideas of how this money might possibly be raised?" Gypsy was asked . . . "Possibly," she replied. "Let Dies enter the Movie Quiz Contest."

The Civic Theater Accords "High Tor" Local Premiere

By Nelson B. Bell

"HIGH TOR." The Washington Civic Theater presents the play in three acts and six scenes by Maxwell Anderson. Directed by F. Cowles Strickland. Settings by William M. Girvan; costumes designed by Dorothy Croissant. At the Wardman Park Theater.

With its odd combination of a young ruralist's pride of possession of a towering peak of rock overlooking the Hudson River, predatory big business, corrupt judiciary, love and the poetic apostrophes of the wraiths of a band of shipwrecked Dutch voyagers who have maintained their mundane contacts through 300 years, "High Tor" presents a peculiarly complex problem for any but the most skillful professional acting groups. It is written in divergent styles and moods such as only Maxwell Anderson, among contemporary playwrights, seems able to command at will. It presents a difficult and tricky task; one calculated to test the capabilities of any cast.

That the Washington Civic Theater has been able to give it as complete a production and as competent a performance as was disclosed to the general public for the first time in Washington in the Wardman Park Theater last night, redounds entirely to its credit.

Not an Ideal Vehicle

But "High Tor," even so, may not be looked upon as one of the Civic's ideal vehicles or one that may be ranked with the finest of its achievements. Last night's performance, the first of the play on any Washington stage, lacked the briskness and sureness of timing and attack necessary to provide the momentum to carry it over some of the author's melodius, but massive, periods of mellifluous speech. Could the play's pace have been held, in its moments of pure fantasy to the tempo of the spirited moments when the trap-rock gentlemen were being forced to spend the night in one of their own grab-buckets, or the hoodlums were in a frenzy to recover their $25,000 of stolen loot, a much more unified interpretation of the play, which won distinction by daring to combine these diverse elements, would have been accomplished. Mr. Anderson, of course, here has merged elements that cannot be held at a rigidly uniform pace, but the nearer the better.

Cast Well Chosen

The cast to be seen in "High Tor" through the remainder of the current week, in the main, is one of judicious selection. Excellent portrayals were contributed to the vigor and humor of last evening's performance by Harrison Libbey, in the role of Van Van Dorn, owner of High Tor; Kenneth Banghart and Harry Westcott, as the two cunning, would-be purchasers; Richard Kreuzburg, as De Witt, the blustering phantom of an earlier day, and Benjamin K. Schwartz, Robert Langley and Orville Mercier, as the three young bandits, outdone by the strange people and events they encountered. Much of the beauty of the play's imagery was realized by Frances Brunt, as Lise, the ethereal romanticist, longing for her return to her own day in her beloved ancient Holland. Virginia Rand seemed never quite to catch the spirit of the character of Judith, Lise's modern and very real "rival."

The settings and costumes are on a par with the Civic Theater's best, even to the substantial reality of the steam shovel. The play last night was enthusiastically applauded throughout—including the laggard first act—by a large and highly pleased audience.

Cooper Bitten By Auto Bug

Press a button and your windshield is washed; press another and your gas tank is raised. Thumb another gadget and a telescopic radio aerial rises out of the hood.

What sounds like something out of "Buck Rogers" in the twenty-fifth century is merely actual equipment on the high-powered flivver owned by Jackie Cooper.

The young actor's jaloppy has excited more attention among juvenile players on the set of his latest starring picture, "Newsboys' Home," than any hair-raising incident contained in the script.

Practically the only extravagance Jackie is allowed, his flivver is mounted with accessories which in total value nearly equal the original price of the car itself.

Besides air horns, silver disc wheels, banjo steering wheel, special brakes and other extras, including dual ratio axle and racing carburetor, the list of gadgets includes several innovations found only on a few other automobiles in the United States.

Kissing Mystery Is Baffling Paramount

A Phantom of the Opera (or a Shade of Swing) recently put Paramount police department in a quandary and left studio janitresses with the galloping jitters.

Nightly for the past two weeks the imprint of feminine lips has been found on a portrait of Bing Crosby which hangs in Crosby's locked dressing room at the studio.

The janitresses wipe it off, dust the place and depart, locking the door.

But next night, there it is again. It started when Crosby was in Bermuda on a vacation from "Paris Honeymoon." That's all the phantom (or Shade) ever does, just smack the crooner on the portrait, but it's the who and how of it that is worrying the cleaning ladies. It's getting so they do a double take every time they pass a Crosby photograph.

Studio guards maintain a vigil over the dressing rooms, but they haven't seen anyone but the janitresses enter the Crosby premises since Bing left the lot.

It hasn't occurred to them to watch the janitresses!

Mary Haworth's Mail

Would Girl Laugh at Midshipman if He Gave Her Costly Gift on Short Acquaintance?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The story, the characters and the plot are as follows: In September I became acquainted with a very charming girl. We seem very much devoted to each other, and as the Yuletide is rapidly coming to the front, I find myself at a loss to know what to give her. You see, my friends here at the Naval Academy tell me that if I were to give her an expensive gift, she would think me foolish and extravagant and lacking in savoir faire; yet my own feeling is that the best is none too good for her, and I would like to get her the finest my purse can afford. On the other hand, I would hate to make a costly investment and live to learn that the girl was laughing at me behind my back for having done so. I find myself between the devil and the deep blue sea and am looking to you for first aid. Sincerely. BEWILDERED PLEBE.

DEAR BEWILDERED PLEBE: You may rest assured that no girl is going to laugh behind the back of a young, handsome, debonair and devoted admirer—whose devotion she returns—if, as and when he gives her a Christmas gift that is the finest his purse can afford. It is only when such tokens of esteem come from members of the so-called "bald-headed row," that the risibilities of a fascinating young lady are apt to be affected. However, I would counsel you to exercise a certain restraint in the matter of selecting a gift designed to express your feelings for the lady in question, for the reason that you, as a potential officer and a gentleman, have an obligation in conscience to demonstrate, in all ways and in all things, an impeccable brand of taste and decorum.

Which brings us to a consideration of just what to give. Why not make it a book or books—of verse, biography, fiction, philosophy? Such a present would convey a delicate compliment to the inspirational quality of her mind; would imply that her influence upon your life was of the loftiest variety. Or why not make it flowers? Two dozen poinsettias, say, or a magnificent armful of roses with yard-long stems. Such an offering, from the point of view of cost, will prove to be extravagant enough to match your sentiment, and yet will be so dignified, so flawlessly impersonal, as to be downright Chesterfieldian in correctness. As you hope to register "savoir faire" (a knowing how to do, social ability, tact), do not permit your youthful and exuberant ardor to betray you into any such prematurely and presumptuously intimate offering as perfume, jewelry, wearing apparel (as gloves, hose, etc.). M. H.

On Dangerous Ground

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Permit me to call attention to the fact that you and your correspondents have been treading on dangerous ground in discussing the problem of "Bewildered" (November 30), who complains that her husband's neglect has turned marriage into a brother-and-sister relationship. All of you seemed agreed that the husband's marital disability provides the wife with ample basis for seeking satisfaction elsewhere.

If you had considered even for a moment the idea of equal rights in marriage, you might have been less rash in your opinions and suggestions. Consider for a moment the female prototype of this husband—the young wife who has been reared in an atmosphere where the ideals of chastity and purity were so mistakenly overemphasized as to invest her with an ingrained aversion to the true ends of matrimony — namely, mental, spiritual and physical union. The husband of such a woman (and there are many such women) finds her as unresponsive and unsatisfactory a spouse as "Bewildered" finds her husband. Do you think, then, that he should incontinently cast her aside? Should he scrap the marriage and seek elsewhere that union he had thought to find with her?

Surely, considering traditional mores in these matters, you must admit that a greater number of husbands than wives are likely to meet with disappointment and frustration in marriage. Surely you would not wish to adopt one standard for wives and another for husbands. Surely you must recognize the pernicious implications of the philosophy which you and your correspondents have developed during the last fortnight. CALPHURNIA'S HUSBAND.

Consult the Record

DEAR C. H.: There was nothing in my remarks concerning the problem of "Bewildered" which suggested, or even remotely implied the suggestion, that she incontinently "seek satisfaction elsewhere." By referring to the record, you will see that my thought was summed up as follows: "See a doctor; tell him your story; get his opinions firsthand, and then go back to your husband and state your case. If he refuses to co-operate (in solving the problem) to the extent of seeing a doctor, then I would advise you to leave him as a self-preservative measure." This is a far cry from urging her to leave her husband forthwith or to be unfaithful to him or to her marriage vows. As a matter of fact, I have subsequently heard from the wife in question, and as a result of her appeal and the counsel given, the marriage is rapidly being rebuilt on a saner and sturdier foundation. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Physician Calls Hysteria Type of Forgetfulness

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Every once in a while the newspapers carry a story about a man who went suddenly blind, stayed blind a few days and then as suddenly recovered his sight. This is in the same category with the bedridden invalid who is supposed to be paralyzed and to whom some faith healer makes a visit, with the result that the invalid gets up and walks.

These are all examples of the great disease of hysteria, one of the most fascinating and complicated of all mental disorders. It seems impossible that a merely mental condition can cause a person to go blind and to appear to be paralyzed.

King of Forgetfulness

The psychology of hysteria has been pretty well worked out. Basically, it is probable that hysteria is a kind of forgetfulness. We say that a person is hysterical when she—it usually is a she—throws herself around, stiffens herself out, screams and "carries on." We also say that "she forgets herself" and to a certain extent she does. Her basic trouble is that she has forgotten her relationship to the actualities of existence around her.

The hysteria forgets himself and he forgets part of his body. The man who goes blind forgets his vision. When he remembers it, he has ceased to be temporarily hysterical. The paralyzed person in bed has forgotten the part of the mind that means movement in the legs. When that memory is restored the apparent paralysis is cured.

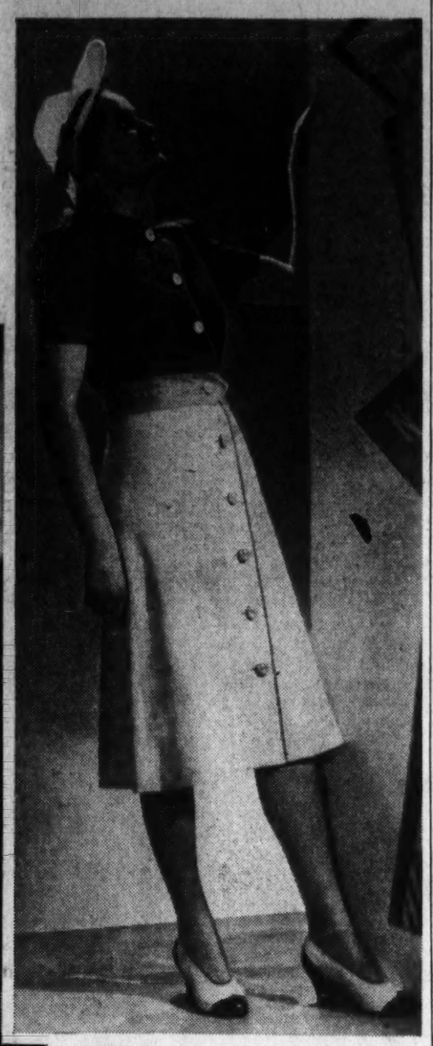
Ways to Detect It

There are a number of ways to detect hysteria. For instance, a person will say his hand is numb. Now, there are two sets of nerves that go to the hand. One set starts fairly far up the wrist, comes down and innervates the thumb, first, second and half of the third finger; the other set comes down and innervates the middle finger and the outer side of the third finger. When there is an actual nerve disease which causes numbness, it can be outlined in one of these two areas. Hysterical numbness, on the other hand, is a numbness of the whole hand, simply as a mental image, and stops abruptly at the ring around the wrist.

The treatment of hysteria is by psychotherapy, although a great many curious treatments in the nature of suggestion have been used. A great deal of medicine is valuable simply because it is suggestive, not because it has any real physiological action.

Resort Frocks Show Tailored Trimness

Resort collections incline toward neatly tailored sports outfits, which should prove relaxing after the winter's mid-Victorianism. Typical of this trend is the dashing two-piece spectator ensemble, right. It is made of fine quality linen which takes to the water as contentedly as a duck. Interesting color combinations are to be had in this southern cruise dress, such as greige tones topped off with turquoise, prophetic of what next summers' girls will be wearing.



The loosely textured classic sports dress, left, is in natural toned hopsacking. It's rayon material gives maximum comfort and ease of motion. Because it is a button-down-the-front model and because it's sole trimming is a pigskin belt, it is discreet enough to start wearing from cruise time on into the summer

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Dec. 13.

SINCE CHINA has been plunged into the Valley of the Shadow, our street corners have been filled with men and women rattling the basket for help. But now something very tangible and exciting has turned up in town to work for the benefit of the sufferers in Asia. It's a troupe of actors and musicians from China who put on an evening's entertainment called "An Evening in Cathay," and the costumes alone are something to make a visit necessary.

ALICE HUGHES

Mrs. Ernest Tong, wife of a Chinese official, thought up the thing, and helped bring the troupe from China on a freighter. The women are lovely to look at, and the rich costumes which are carried in 40 trunks simply have to be seen to be believed at all, so gorgeous are they.

These men and women have given their entertainment on the West Coast, and here they are presenting it in Chinatown as well as in uptown theaters. I have mingled with the troupe, and even met one of the stars—Wei Chung Loh, who is called "the best Pi-pa player in China." Well, that must indeed be something! This Pi-pa is something like a mandolin, but much older. The actors tell me that the Pi-pa has been going on for 5,000 years, or longer than swing music. I'll have to get a load of Mr. Wei Chung Loh and his Pi-pa.

Like all groups of volunteers banded together to do good, this is a lovely and heart-warming crowd of attractive orientals. I'm sure we wish them and their cause well. And they're so darned nice to look at!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The meanest and most dangerous practical joker in this town went to work at our huge Hotel New Yorker a few nights ago. He, she or it rang an alarm bell at 3:30 in the morning—ringing gongs and bringing fire wagons and police cars in droves. What a terrible chance for a fatal panic. Fortunately no one was even hurt—but oh, how New York would like to get its hands on that villain. Probably a drunk—but that is no alibi for such terrorism.

Martha Hodge, the pretty daughter of the late William Hodge, famous for his work in "The Man From Home," certainly had no luck with matrimony. Although she only eloped last July, she already wants freedom from Robert Kennedy, a broker of our city. Martha wants no alimony—only her maiden name. Gee, such a marriage hardly shows in the book at all!

And the theater is hitting about as usual, though we do have some very fine shows. Up to a few days ago, 33 shows had opened—and 19 had closed. That's about Broadway's usual percentage, these days. Not too happy, though.

Clever Tricks With Hosiery May Camouflage Leg Defects

Hollywood Stars Can Disguise Bow Legs
Also Make Calves Seem More Slender
Designer Tells How It Is Done

By Ida Jean Kain.

HOLLYWOOD is perhaps the most ingenious place in the world. There nothing is impossible, even to making thick legs appear slender and skinny legs rounded. It's done with stockings.

When Willys, of Hollywood, creator of magic in stockings, was in New York recently I button-holed him for some of these tricks with hosiery. Of course, he did not admit anything short of perfection for the film gals, but he knew all the answers!

"What do you do for bow legs?" I asked tactlessly—just as if there were some bow legs in Hollywood! But after all, they are just flesh and blood and bone and among the hundreds of film beauties there must be one or two with knock knees, or anyway thick ankles.

"Bow legs? Wear the seam of the stocking toward the outside of the leg, or wear stockings with clocks. Wide clocks, tapering from a 2-inch base up to a point, are also very slenderizing to heavy legs. Pointed heels make thick ankles look slimmer and square, low heels in the stockings make the ankles appear wider."

Also, this authority advises, a pronounced seam helps to slenderize the wide calf—and it makes the beautiful leg more beautiful. One of the cleverest of all the tricks for slenderizing is the use of ombre shaded hose. The shading is from light to dark, with the calf in shadow, and blending from light at the front of the leg to darker at the seam in the back.

The mesh is important, too. With thick legs it is best to wear a mesh with a perpendicular line, while a horizontal mesh is more flattering to legs that are thin.

And If You're Short . . .

If you are short, you should, first of all, avoid stockings with high heels, which cut the length of the leg. Try to co-ordinate the color of the hose as closely as possible with the color of the skirt, that there will be no sharply dividing line to break you up into sections.

And while I had a chance to talk with this authority I got in a question that concerns all of us—how to make stockings last longer. Delayed washing, he told me, is the thing that causes stockings to wear out most quickly. They should be washed ever time they are worn, because the silk is rotted by perspiration and soil. Also, the silk stretches with wearing, and washing closes the weave.

Lay Hose Flat to Dry

Soap should never be rubbed on the stockings. In fact, they should not be rubbed at all, just squeezed through the suds. For protection against the effects of perspiration and alkalies, the rinse should contain either a tablespoon of epsom salts or a tablespoon of vinegar. Don't hang stockings up to dry. They should be laid flat, for if they are hung up the water drips through and wears down the silk. And, of course, stockings should never be dried in the sun or near a radiator.

Perfect New Dance Steps

WHAT makes you a hit with the stag line at dances? Not a tricky dress or good looks—as so many girls think—but good dancing!

Who'd cut in on Sally, always under-her partner's feet? Or on Judy who looks so limp and droopy? Yet with a few home lessons both would rate as many cut-ins as Elsie, the belle of the ball.

Simple to avoid your partner's feet. Practice long backward steps alone. Keep your weight on your forward foot until you've reached way, way back with the big toe of the back foot. Then switch weight.

Watch out you don't carry your weight back on your heels. That makes it hard for your partner to give you a forward lead. Balance lightly on the balls of your feet, relax, and you'll easily follow your partner's every step and turn.

And do remember dancing's fun! Don't drag limply along, but dance with a slight forward sway so you can easily raise your heels, go liltingly from one step to another. Keep arms up, head too—and smile!

Of course the more steps you know the better your chances to make a hit. Be expert at tango, rumba, waltz, shag—all popular dances. Easy when you practice with diagrams showing how to place your feet and keep time.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, Social Dancing Self-Taught, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Mrs. Santa Claus

I

It seems that everywhere I turn,
Somebody has the Christmas yearn
The man who brings me my potatoes,
The man who brings me my tomatoes,
The man who comes to clean my lawn,
The man who delivers things at dawn,
Are telling me of what they'd prize,
And stating color, shape and size.

II

All of the vendors with whom I'm dealing,
Are sounding out my Christmas feeling,
And all the men that carry my trays,
And do me favors in devious ways,
And then the men who serve as waiters,
And those that run the elevators,
Are warning me that Yuletide's near,
That money is scarce and things are dear.

III

Whenever I step across a pin,
Someone assists me my graces to win,
I cannot utter a "How do you do?"
But someone tells me that alas he too,
Is facing a Christmas all too dreary,
So of being civil I've become most leery,
I'm pretty sick of all this whining,
I'd like a little less gold mining.

IV

I cannot pass the time of day
With anyone who's not quick to say
That he hasn't the cash to make any whoopee,
Consequently he's feeling very droopy,
And Christmas is here and what shall he do?
And I think of my own leaking half-soled shoe,
As I listen to what he hasn't got,
And I always long to say "So what?"

V

Why even the strange man I meet on my walk,
Is looking so friendly as as if he would talk,
I'm sure he expects a little token,
He'll ask, no doubt if the ice is broken;
On every hand I am getting a hint,
From people who think I own the mint,
The world seems full of grown-up babies,
Adults who have the Christmas rabies.

VI

Now I must dig down in my flattened purse,
And to left and right very grandly disperse,
To live in peace the rest of the year,
And so I must say to my children dear,
"Abandon search for reindeer clews,
"And there's no use in watching flues,
"Nor being still as any mouse,
"There'll be no Santa at our house."

88 Members of Society Attend Cabinet Dinner, First Formal Affair of White House Season

Morgenthaus' Head List of Guests Ushered Into State Dining Room; Only Secretaries Hull and Swanson Absent

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

WITH CUSTOMARY POMP and ceremony, 88 guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt last evening took their seats in the State dining room.

The occasion was the Cabinet dinner, formally inaugurating the White House social season—two months punctuated with wining and dining and huge receptions—all ruled by the iron hand of precedent.

As for many such functions in the past, the magnificent Monroe service decorated the horseshoe table last evening. White tapers burned in ornate candelabra. Bunches of grapes dripped from the graceful epergnes in horn-of-plenty fashion; and the long mirrored centerpiece and matching gold baskets up and down the table were filled with pink roses, pink snapdragons, stevia and maidenhair fern.

All members of the Cabinet were in the company—escorted, at exactly 8 o'clock, past the scarlet-coated Marine Band orchestra, with the exception of Secretary of State Hull, who is in Peru, and Secretary of Navy Swanson, who is ill. Also among the guests were the United States Ambassador to France, William C. Bullitt; Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, jr., and Mrs. Roosevelt's debutante niece, Miss Eleanor Roosevelt, of Dedham and Boston, Mass., who was accompanied by her father, Hall Roosevelt.

Following dinner, guests were ushered into the East room, where they joined a number of others invited in for music. Miss Stell Anderson, pianist, Mack Harrell, baritone and Coenrad V. Bos, pianist, gave a varied program to the delight of the crowd. But the biggest burst of applause went to the dance team of Chaney and Fox, who climaxed the evening's entertainment with the "Eleanor Glide," their new dance inspired by Mrs. Roosevelt, and their own special version of the "Lambeth Walk." Phil Lampkin was accompanist.

Morgenthaus Head List of Guests

The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau headed the list of dinner guests. She was gowned in black velvet, fashioned with a full skirt, appliqued with net and worn over a gold slip. The Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring, she in white corded silk, made on fitted lines with a slight train, were there; also, the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, making their farewell appearance as ranking guests at the Cabinet dinner. Mrs. Cummings chose for the event a frock of fuschia silk crepe, worn with a corsage of orchids.

In town especially for the event, the Postmaster General and Mrs. Farley were among the first arrivals, she wearing black lace over blue and gold lame. Mrs. Farley will leave today for New York, where the Postmaster General will join her and their children for Christmas.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson was gowned in pink silk brocade, styled with a brief train and set off with a gardenia corsage. Making her "debut" at a White House state function, the youngest and newest Cabinet hostess, Mrs. Harold Ickes chose as her coming out frock a vivid green model of slipper satin, flecked with silver threads and made with a slight train and long sleeves, leg o' mutton effect at the top and tight from elbow to wrist.

The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Wallace, the latter gowned in gray net; the Secretary of Commerce with Mrs. Roper, who was in black marquisette, embellished with a buckle of brilliants and inserts of Chantilly lace; and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who appeared in dark blue crepe with a silver jacket, completed the list from the Cabinet circle.

Joseph M. Patterson Attends With Wife

MRS. GEORGE H. EARLE, wife of the Governor of Pennsylvania, was among the guests; also, the Acting Secretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles, Marvin H. McIntyre and Stephen T. Early, secretaries to the President, and Mrs. Early; the Under Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. John W. Hanes, Marriner S. Eccles, chairman, board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, and Mrs. Eccles; the Assistant Secretary of War and Mrs. Louis Johnson; the First Assistant Postmaster General and Mrs. William W. Howes; the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison.

Gen. Malin Craig, Army Chief of Staff, and Mrs. Craig were among the guests; also, Norman Davis, Jesse H. Jones, of the RFC, and Mrs. Jones; the Wage-Hour Administrator and Mrs. Elmer F. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond P. Brandt, Roger Brett, Frederic A. Delano, of the National Resources Committee; Mrs. George H. Dern, Edward Flynn, of the New York World's Fair Commission, and Mrs. Flynn; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Godwin, William Hassett, F. F. Hill of the Farm Credit Association, and Mrs. Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Henry S. Hooker, of New York; Harry L. Hopkins, WPA Administrator; James L. Houghteling, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and Mrs. Houghteling; Mrs. Louis McHenry Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Gerard B. Lambert, William M. Counselor of British Embassy Gives Dinner to Honor the Edens

Hinchingbrookes Are Feted at Same Time By Keith Officer, Australian Attache; Lady Lindsay to Be Tea Host Today

Climaxing a whirlwind day of talks with the President and Sumner Welles, a speech before the National Press Club, a sightseeing tour and tea with Mrs. Roosevelt, Anthony Eden was guest of honor with Mrs. Eden at a dinner given last evening by the Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. Victor Mallet.

Today the Edens will be feted not only at a dinner at the British Embassy, but also at a tea at which Lady Lindsay will entertain this afternoon.

While Capt. and Mrs. Eden were being entertained at the Mallet residence on Massachusetts avenue, the statesman's private secretary, Viscount Hinchingbrooke, and the Viscountess were feted by Keith Officer, Australian Counselor of the embassy, at his home in Georgetown. Both parties were small and informal, as the British embassy is observing court mourning for the late Queen Maude of Norway.

Gathered to meet Capt. and Mrs. Eden at dinner were the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, the political adviser to the State Department, James Clement Dunn, and Mrs. Dunn; Mr. and Mrs. Dean Acheson and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

Mr. Officer's guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose, Mrs. Kent Legare and Wheeler Bennett, young English author who wrote "Hindenberg, the Wooden Titan" and is now making his home at the University of Virginia.

Mr. Eden's engagements today include a luncheon at the home of the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles and dinner at the British Embassy.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Mallet went to New York earlier in the week to greet Mr. and Mrs. Eden.

The 1939 Social Register for Washington, recently distributed, indicates that marriages have slumped this year, as only 160 persons walked down the aisle, against 176 the year before, and 212 in the 1937 edition.

Deaths have decreased slightly with only 35 listed for women and 45 for men. Last year the figures were 42 for women and 41 for men. The little "black book of the blue bloods" continues to be bound in the same type of black and red cover with the same typographical make-up it has had since 1887.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

HAVE YOU HEARD:

That a member of the British Embassy staff motors out to a hamburger palace on Connecticut avenue nearly every day and perches at the counter for lunch? . . . that Ambassador Bullitt seems to prefer the company of dowagers at parties, much to the despair of local matchmakers? . . . that Carolyn Chantry is studying for an M. A. in philosophy and is also taking a short story course? . . . that it's almost impossible to get an invitation for a visiting friend, even to a large party at the White House? . . . that somebody called up a legation here recently to ask if it was in mourning for the late Queen Maude of Norway and was told "We're in mourning, but I don't know who for"? . . . that Mrs. Arthur Clephane can't find a pocketbook large enough for her tastes, so carries two, made exactly alike, of black suede lined with red?

AN ORDINARILY peaceable friend of ours has been going around muttering vaguely about revolutions ever since she attended the opening on Monday night of Thornton Wilder's moving play, "Our Town." Said friend happened to sit next to a very wealthy and socially active Washington woman, whose name we withhold out of charity, who was accompanied by another woman.

Said the matron to her companion:

"Have you everh eard of this play before?"

Flipping the program, the lady replied, "No, but it's by somebody by the name of Thornton Wilder," pronouncing it to rhyme with "killed her."

Our friend could not resist turning around and saying acidly "It won the Pulitzer Prize, you know."

"Oh," said the woman to her companion, "it won the Pewlitzer Prize, did it?"

A PROGRAM of concentrated gayety is being planned for younger people home from school for the Christmas holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor and Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Houghteling will give a dinner December 22 for Rose Chatfield Taylor, Cynthia Dunn, and Peggy Houghteling. The party will precede the regular Thursday evening dance at the club.

Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes will entertain at a luncheon next Monday in honor of her niece, Miss Elizabeth Stokes, and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Underwood have cards out for a tea on Thursday, December 22, for their daughter, Anne.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM FLATHER will give a dinner on Friday, December 30, in honor of Georgianna Flather. The party will precede the dance to be held at the home of Mrs. Keith Merrill, by the committee, a group of Washington residents who arrange certain parties for the younger set. The members include Mrs. Merrill, Mrs. Acheson, Mrs. Chatfield Taylor, Mrs. Flather, Mrs. Charles G. Glover, Mrs. Reginald Huidekoper, Mrs. Theodore Wilkinson and Mrs. Richard Wilmer.

OTHER NOTES: Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Emmons will arrive December 23 to spend Christmas with the latter's mother, Mrs. Moulton Johnson, and her sister, Belle Johnson . . . Mr. and Mrs. Russell Sard will give a tea on Friday from 5 to 7 . . . Mrs. Jerauld Wright (Phyllis Thompson) will leave the West Coast by train January 2 for visits to New York and Washington . . . Anthony de Balasy, Counselor of the Hungarian Legation, is expected back from a vacation in Europe in time for Christmas.

Benefit Fete To Aid Children

Mrs. John R. Williams, general chairman of the Thrift Shops of Washington, whose board comprises prominent Washington women representing the children's charities in the city, will sponsor the first performance in America of the Yvonne Georgi Ballet.

The latter will appear for a single evening's program January 8, at the National Theater—this night having been chosen by the Thrift Shop for the benefit because of the always crowded week nights in January's social schedule.

Other members of the board, working for the success of the benefit, are Mrs. Chandler Anderson, Mrs. Charles Bradley, Mrs. Dexter Bullard, Mrs. Archibald Davis, Mrs. Harry Kerr, Mrs. Frank Letts, Mrs. Reeve Lewis, Mrs. Ormsby McCammon, Mrs. Henry Miller, Mrs. Barry Mohun, Mrs. James Patten, Mrs. Richard Southgate, Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney and Mrs. Richard Wilner.

The proceeds from the performance will go towards the work of the Thrift Shop board and its special charities, notably the Children's Country Convalescent Home, the Children's Hospital, the Child Welfare and the baby clinic at Columbia Hospital. It is expected that the audience will be one of the most brilliant of the early New Year season, combining in its makeup many members of the Diplomatic Corps, official and residential society of the Capital, and outstanding lovers of the arts, notably that of the ballet.

Give Reception

Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Henry B. Holmes, jr., entertained at a reception yesterday afternoon from 5 to 7 at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Galbraith, who have been staying at the Anchorage. Capt. and Mrs. Galbraith will not open their home here at all this winter as they expect to take a cruise about the time Mrs. Merryman returns.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

ONE OF THE MOST popular of the Virginia hunts this season is the Cobbler Hunt, near Delaplane of which Dr. Edmund Horgan is M. F. H., and for which fixture cards have just been issued. Now that Col. George Patton is back at Fort Myer, it is expected that he will ride with the group, for previous to his assignment to Hawaii, Col. Patton was W. F. H. Dr. Horgan succeeded to the mastership when Col Patton went away and one of the best known events of the hunt country is the annual breakfast which Dr. and Mrs. Horgan give at their home, Ashleigh, each season.

COL. AND MRS. PATTON, and their daughters, Mrs. John Walter, formerly Miss Bee Patton, and Miss Ruth Ellen Patton used to motor to Delaplane in time for early meets, hunt all day and then drive back to Washington that evening.

An old time Virginia "horse talking" party took place at the Peach House on the Langollen Farm estate of the Jock Whitneys recently when Mr. and Mrs. Dion Kerr, who are now living there, entertained some of their friends. orway and was told "We're in The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frost, Miss Lucy Stone and Lee Evans.

DION KERR, "Courtie" Smith and Lee Evans were the best steeplechase riders in America about 25 years ago. No one has ever equaled Mrs. Frost in the show ring—she was formerly Miss Dora Henry, of Millwood—or Miss Stone and Mrs. Smith in the hunting field.

2 Women's Groups Here Hear How to Stop Japan

Freda Utley, British Author, Tells What She Saw in China to Press Club and To Committee of D. C. Voteless League

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

If Great Britain and the United States would co-operate in refusing to buy silk from Japan, she would have no credits with which to purchase war materials and her aggression in China would end.

This was the substance of the discussion of the Far East situation presented by Miss Freda Utley, British author, journalist and war correspondent, in addresses yesterday afternoon before the luncheon meeting of the Women's National Press Club, at the Willard, last night at a meeting sponsored by the Department of Government and Foreign Policy of the District of Columbia Voteless League of Women Voters, in Foundry Methodist Church.

Miss Utley, recently returned from China, where she witnessed the horrors of war, not only on the battlefield, but also in the cities and villlages, where thousands of women and children are being killed and wounded, made a plea for the Chinese people.

"With one hand you sell instruments of war and with the other send money for relief," she said. "There is no doubt about the sympathy of the American people for the Chinese, but I'd like to quote what a Chinese doctor said to me: 'Why wouldn't it be possible for the Americans to give the money they are sending over here to the oil and iron interests instead of letting them sell weapons to Japan to kill us with?'"

Simple Statements Present Vivid Picture

Miss Utley was direct and straight forward in addressing her audiences and in answering questions. She told of what she had seen in China without any attempt to dramatize a picture which, told in barest fact, revealed "a war more terrible than any mankind has yet witnessed." European events, which seem nearer, have pushed off the front page the news of China, but Japanese aggression has made 50,000,000 refugees, she said, "a very ocean of misery."

"If people would see with their own eyes what I saw in China, there would be a tremendous move to stop the means of aggression by Japan," she declared.

"If the United States and Great Britain could get together for only a few months, they could stop the war without firing a shot. Seventy per cent of the trade of Japan is with us jointly. If we didn't buy from her, she could not get the money to buy from us. Although Japanese soldiers are fighting, it is our metal and our oil that are carrying on the war."

She told of the lack of motor equipment to bring the wounded from the front to hospitals. Even those not seriously wounded often succumb at the end of a 5 or 10 mile walk over shell torn roads to a hospital base, she said. Only the seriously wounded are carried in the two or three trucks operating in some sections where 1,000 men may fall in 24 hours.

She spent little time on descriptions of her own experiences. She told enough in the passing mention of holding onto the rear of a truck in which wounded were being brought from the front, and of going with the men correspondents of American papers toward the front lines and having to hide every half hour in shell holes or ditches, under cover of leaves, to escape the bombs being dropped by low-flying Japanese raiding planes.

Would Close Door To Foreign Rivals

She pointed out that, should Japan conquer China, the door would close to this country and Great Britain. Japan would develop the coal, iron and cotton and sit down to oppress the population with her drug traffic and taxes.

"I am not advocating that we should go to war with Japan," declared Miss Utley, "but, by severing trade relations, that we stop the war without going to war."

She expressed the opinion this country must take the lead in economic sanctions, and that Great Britain would follow. She asserted it was a tragedy that there was a feeling here that, because of the Munich pact, Great Britain could not be counted on to co-operate against any aggressor. "In the last few months," she said, "the British have awakened to the fact that there is no possibility of compromise with Japan, and that the only possibility of saving anything is by Anglo-American co-operation."

Hope Ridings Miller, society editor of The Post, who is president of the Women's National Press Club, introduced Miss Utley at the luncheon, and Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, chairman of the Department of Government and Foreign Policy for the League of Women Voters, presided at the night meeting.

Miss Utley also was entertained at tea by the Washington branch of the A. A. U. W., where she received with Mrs. Robert Olesen, the president. She is author of three books on the Far East situation, "Japan's Feet of Clay," "Behind the Lines in China," and her latest, "Japan's Gamble in China."

Somerset Club To Give Party

The Woman's Club of Somerset will give its annual Christmas party Saturday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Abbot, 417 Essex avenue. Last year the party was given at the Abbot home also and was attended by 75 members and guests. The program this season will be a musical fantasy and two short Christmas skits.

Entre Nous Club Makes Bedside Bags for Patients

More than 40 members of the Entre Nous Club gathered yesterday at the Girls Hospice, 1525 Sixteenth street, to make bedside bags for patients in Walter Reed Hospital. About 70 bags were made during the afternoon and will be given to the hospital to be distributed on Christmas.

Work for the holidays was planned at the business meeting at which Mrs. Charles P. Keyser, the president and founder, presided. Families who have been helped before will be remembered this year with toys and clothing for the children and food and clothing for the others.

There was a program of Christmas music in the afternoon following a luncheon. Mrs. Ruth Snodgrass sang Christmas carols and Herbert Carr played a group of piano selections, some of them his own transcriptions of old hymns.

The committee in charge of the work included Mrs. Otis Rogers, Mrs. James Underwood, Mrs. Miles Trowbridge and Mrs. Robert McKinley. Hostesses for the day were Mrs. Keyser, Mrs. William W. Badgley; Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, Miss Jane Anderson and Mrs. Charles Dasher.

City Club Will Hear Dr. Blackwelder Tonight

Mrs. John S. Bennett, chairman of the business and professional section of the Woman's City Club, has arranged the entertainment for the dinner at 6:30 tonight at the club, at wich Dr. Oscar Blackwelder, pastor of the Church of the Reformation, will speak on the "Significance of Christmas."

As a part of the program the Alden Singers will entertain with Christmas music. These singers are Miss Anna Embrey, soprano; Miss Charlotte LaFond, contralto; Earl Naulls, tenor, and Watson Ahlenfeld, bass, accompanied by Miss Jewell Downs at the piano.

Owing to the illness of Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley and the absence from the city of Mrs. Horace J. Phelps, the civics committee luncheon planned for Saturday, December 17, has been canceled.

Cultus Club Gives Skit At Luncheon

In Roles of Snow White and 7 Dwarfs, Members Depicted History of Group

Members of the Cultus Club assumed the roles of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs yesterday to present an entertaining allegory, depicting the history of the organization. The program was given following a luncheon at the Mayflower in celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the organization and was in charge of Mrs. George W. Harris. The skit was written by Mrs. Henry Polkinhorn.

The 25 members had invited guests and nearly 75 were present. The luncheon was served in the Chinese room of the hotel with silver and white Christmas trees and bright Christmas balls as decorations. At each place was a branch coral clip in the shape of a thistle as a souvenir of the coral anniversary.

Founder Among Members Present

Mrs. Jane S. Elliott, founder of the club and now vice president, was seated beside Mrs. Henry Teller Cocke, president.

Mrs. Harris has had charge of the anniversary parties ever since she became a member of the club two years after its founding. She joined when she came to Washington as a bride and has belonged ever since.

Taking the part of the prince in yesterday's skit, she used her small granddaughter's rocking-horse as her "steed." Mrs. Daniel Davis was Snow White; Mrs. Clifford Berryman, Grumpy; Mrs. William H. Sholes, Sneezy; Mrs. Charles Nesbit, Bashful; Mrs. William Kinnan, Sleepy; Mrs. Ralph Baranard, Happy; Mrs. Augustus Taylor, Dopey; Mrs. Appleton Clark, Doc, and Mrs. Charles Demonet, the "wicked queen."

Mrs. Ramsay Nevitt, as the fairy, entered, bringing a large toadstool and placed it by the miniature home of the seven dwarfs, which stood on the platform in a setting of palms. Mrs. Polkinhorn gave the prologue.

Masks Are the 'Make-up' for Roles

The characters all wore bright yellow cambric costumes and false faces, with little hats on which their names were plainly written. Instead of having printed programs, identifying the club members who took the various roles, the programs bore photographs of each of them, beside which were little pictures of the characters they played.

The seven dwarfs entered, bearing bagsful of "jewels," representing gems of knowledge they had dug out of their encyclopedia mines. They sang of the work of the Cultus Club in literature, art, biography and other subjects it has studied through the years, telling its history in clever lines adapted to the familiar tunes of "Snow White." Mrs. James Shera Montgomery accompanied the singing. In the grand finale, Mrs. Elliott was ushered to the stage, to be honored as the founder and presented with a bouquet of flowers.

Officers of the club include, in addition to Mrs. Cocke and Mrs. Elliott, Mrs. Ara Daniels, recording secretary; Mrs. S. E. Lewis, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Nesbit, the treasurer.

Dress Rehearsal Held For Arts Club Play

Dress rehearsal was held last night for the Arts Club production of Leslie Howard's "Murray Hill," to be given tonight and tomorrow at the clubhouse.

A number of dinners will precede the play on both nights. Tonight Mrs. Robert W. Mess will entertain a party of six, Mrs. F. W. Smith a party of five and Dore Walton a party of four. Tomorrow Commander and Mrs. L. F. Safford will entertain a party of six, Francis G. Wells a party of eight and Miss Lucia B. Hollerith a party of four.

Last Session Today Of Speaking Class

Mrs. Hugh Butler's practical platform speaking class will hold its final fall session today at 11:30 p. m., in the private dining room of the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women. The final meeting is held around the luncheon table where the entertaining speeches will be given.

Two prizes will be presented by the teacher—the first to the speaker who has improved the most, and the second to the best speaker of the class.

Warrant Out For President Of Drug Firm

Coster's Arrest Ordered In Apparent Loss of $18,000,000 Assets

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 13.—The Government ordered today the arrest of F. Donald Coster, president of McKesson & Robbins, Inc., and two other men, as four separate investigations went deeper into the mystery of the drug corporation's apparent loss of $18,000,000 in listed assets.

Warrants issued by United States Commissioner Garrett W. Cotter charged Coster, George S. Dietrich, assistant treasurer, and George Vernard, Montreal representative of W. W. Smith & Co., English agent for the firm, with violation of the securities act of 1934.

Samuel Rich, counsel for Coster and Dietrich, said they would surrender in Bridgeport, Conn., tomorrow.

Sought to Reorganize

Meanwhile, the board of McKesson & Robbins, which called for the resignation of the two men yesterday, ordered a special meeting for next Monday at which removal action will be taken. Coster and Dietrich had been given until noon today to resign.

The corporation filed a petition last Thursday to reorganize under the Federal bankruptcy act upon discovery of the apparent loss in assets. The SEC, a party to this proceeding, is conducting an investigation of its own.

Shortly after the warrants were issued Gregory F. Noonan, chief of the criminal division of the United States attorney's office, began presenting evidence to a Federal grand jury. The first witness was Julian F. Thompson, treasurer of McKesson & Robbins, and one of the two men who last week informed a New York Stock Exchange commission something was wrong with the company's finances so far as the crude drugs department was concerned.

Dewey Promises Inquiry

District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey also promised a thorough investigation of the firm. Many witnesses already have been questioned, he said.

Coster, who lives in Fairfield, Conn., is 54 years old and has been president of McKesson & Robbins since 1926.

State Attorney General John J. Bennett, jr., who Saturday obtained a Supreme Court order tying up a $100,000 brokerage account in the name of Mrs. Carol E. Coster, Coster's wife, learned today at a public hearing of other brokerage accounts controlled by Coster.

One of these was in the name of John O. Jenkins, a brother of Mrs. Coster, and one of the chief witnesses at the hearing before Assistant Attorney General Ambrose V. McCall. Jenkins identified a statement of the brokerage firm of Steiner, Rouse & Co., which indicated a payment on December 29, 1936, of $139,130.51 to the Jenkins account. McCall asked Jenkins what he did with the check.

Hearing Put Off

"I indorsed it and gave it to Mr. Coster," he replied.

McCall produced another account, opened February 16, 1938, with one entry on November 30, showing a deposit of 10,000 shares of McKesson & Robbins, common, and 4,000 shares of preferred stock. A final entry indicated the sale of the preferred stock and showed a balance of $14,000 in cash and the 10,000 shares of common stock.

State Supreme Court Justice Black later signed an order tieing up the Jenkins account. The order required Jenkins to appear in court December 19 with all books and papers relating to the case.

American League Will Adopt Night Baseball Plan Today

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

New York, Dec. 13.—If a baseball trading meeting were reported in the Eugene O'Neil manner:

POVICH.

The scene—The Waldorf.

Time—The present.

Characters—Clark Griffith, Washington owner, and any number of American League managers.

Enter Griffith, well-chewed stogie in hand, and surveying the bristling lobby.

GRIFFITH to Del Baker, manager of the Detroit Tigers: "How're we going to stop those Yankees, Del? Can't let 'em get away with another pennant. Bad for the game. I was thinking your Tigers might do it if you were a LEETLE stronger in the infield, huh?" (I guess that'll set him to thinking about Cecil Travis).

BAKER: "Oh, I don't know. We're shaping up pretty well. I'm not worried about my infield." (This old bird is pretty cagey. He wants to draw me out about Travis).

GRIFFITH: "I'll say one thing. Shortstops didn't come much better than Bill Rogell when he was younger." (He isn't young any more and you know it).

BAKER: "Oh, we can string along with Rogell for at least another year." (Baker, you're an awful liar).

GRIFFITH: "That Cleveland crowd has its nerve with 'em, Del. Who do you suppose they offered me for Travis? They want him for Johnny Allen and Earl Averill. They must think I'm teched." (I would be if I didn't make that deal before they had a chance to back out).

BAKER: "Averill and Allen. Iz zat so?" (Who are you trying to kid, Griff?).

GRIFFITH: "Yep. Averill and Allen. But they'll have to do better than that. If the price were right, I might let Travis go, but the price'd have to be right. (Ah, I think he's interested).

Who's Bluffing Whom?

BAKER: "Travis doesn't hit so well in the pinches." (But he'd look pretty nice in our batting order, getting on base the way he does).

GRIFFITH: "Don't you believe he doesn't hit in the pinches. That's poppycock. (Who's been telling this fellow about Travis. Why do people tell all they know?).

BAKER: "Travis might fit in pretty nice for us as a utility shortstop." (We'd utilize him for about 154 games a year, that's all).

GRIFFITH: "Utility! That's a laugh. I wouldn't trade him even for Rudy York and Tommy Bridges. (Not much, I wouldn't).

BAKER: "York and Bridges. I'll say you wouldn't trade Travis even for 'em. You wouldn't get the chance." (I wonder if it wouldn't be a pretty smart deal for us at that?):

GRIFFITH: "That big York never will make a catcher. And I understand Bridges is washed up." (What a swell catcher that York is going to make some day! And Bridges could go into a slump and still win his 20 every year in our big park).

'No Deal Today, Pal'

BAKER: "Looks like you and I don't want to make a deal." (Baker, you're still an awful liar).

GRIFFITH: "Well I like to trade just to be doing something. If you want to toss in a little something with York and Bridges, it's a deal." (Maybe I should start walking away, just for the effect).

BAKER: "Toss in a little something? Sorry, old man, not until I go crazy. And I'm not offering York and Bridges for Travis, understand? You brought that up, not I." (I guess that'll tone him down).

GRIFFITH: "Well, tell ya what I'll do. Make it York for Travis and it's a trade." (Wonder if I was a bit too hasty?)

BAKER: "I'll let you know. See you in the morning." (I've got him on the hook).

Griffith spies Oscar Vitt, manager of the Cleveland Indians, and offers Vitt a cigar.

'Why, Hello Oscar Ole Man'

GRIFFITH: "'Lo, Oscar. What are we going to do about stopping those Yankees next season? I sorta think you could do it with your Indians if you were a LEETLE better in the infield." (He's weak in the infield, but he hasn't a chance of stopping the Yanks).

VITT: "I don't know about that. We've got our eyes on a couple of infielders who'll help us." (This fellow is going to try to peddle Travis to me or I'm as wrong as the guy who thought the gun wasn't loaded).

GRIFFITH: "Just was talking to Del Baker. He wants to trade me York and Bridges for Cecil Travis. Must think I'm crazy." (Nice going, Griff. You always could keep a straight face when you're talking trade).

'Boy, What a Story!'

VITT: "I kinda think I'd make that trade if I were you Griff." (He must think I'm balmy to believe that stuff).

GRIFFITH: "Well, I was looking for an outfielder. A fellow like Averill. We're pretty well set for pitching." (I hope I'm forgiven for this).

VITT: "Yeah, Averill would help you. I'll think that over." (This fellow must be getting soft. I'll make this trade right now).

GRIFFITH: "Well, I was thinking. Averill and Johnny Allen for Travis. There's a deal that can be made." (If he faints, I'll catch him).

VITT: "Averill and Allen for Travis! You don't want to talk trade with the Indians, Griff. You want to loot 'em. G'mbye!"

4 Games Carded In Gov't League

Four teams will see action tonight at the Bolling Field gym in a twin bill of the United States Government Basketball League. In the first game scheduled at 8 p. m., the Bureau of Engraving and Printing team will meet the Department of Agriculture five in a battle for fourth place, while the second tilt will bring together the Federal Bureau of Investigation quintet and the Procurement cagers of the Treasury Department, starting at 9:20 p. m.

Joe Zwisle, forward of the league-leading and unbeaten Bolling Field outfit, is sharing first place in point scoring with Paul Blumensaadt, of the Army Medical Center team. Each has 45 points. Zwisle garnered his tallies on 19 baskets and 7 foul shots, while Blumensaadt tallied 18 field goals and 9 penalty throws, the latter figure giving him the league foul-scoring leadership.

Publinx Courses Get 'Face-Lifting'

Bids for the construction and operation of several new units of public golf courses were called for yesterday as the National Capital Parks Commission inaugurated plans to provide more recreational space for the city.

Under the proposed plan, East Potomac Park will be shorn of nine of its 36 holes to make way for tennis courts and softball fields. The nine-hole course at Lincoln Memorial will be closed and nine new holes to be laid out in section G, Anacostia, opened for colored linksmen.

Nine of the 18 holes in Anacostia will be eliminated, but a new nine-hole layout will be built at Fort Dupont to offset their loss. The ground now used for golf at Anacostia is designated for that purpose only temporarily, and eventually will be used for more intensive sports.

Bids for the projects must be submitted on or before Thursday, December 22.

Murphy's Goal Defeats Loyola For Georgetown

Last-Minute Basket Brings Hoyas 36-34 Victory and Check Losers' Game Comeback; Murphy Leads Scorers With 15 Points

Scheduled as a "breather," little Loyola College of Baltimore had Elmer Ripley's Georgetown courtmen gasping for breath in the second half last night as the Hoyas barely managed to eke out their second victory of the season by a score of 36 to 34.

Some 500 spectators at Tech gym saw Capt. Joe Murphy slip in a running one-hand shot in the final minute of play to provide the Hoyas with their slender margin of victory. Murphy's basket, delivered beautifully as he charged in from the side and leaped between a cluster of Loyola players, nullified a splendid comeback by the losers who had tied the score at 34-34 just seconds before.

Behind 25-16 midway in the second half, Loyola with three freshmen in its lineup engineered a fast attack which slowly but steadily ate into the once-ample Georgetown lead. With Freshmen Bernie Thobe, a substitute forward, and Vic Bock, center, counting frequently on follows and under-the-basket shots as they cut in swiftly from the side, Loyola pulled up to 24-25 before the bewildered Hoyas were able to stage a counter-attack.

Visitors Come Back

Johnny McGowan, sophomore center, then dropped in a follow shot and Johnny Schmitt rammed in a pair of snowbirds to boost Georgetown's advantage to 31 to 24 and Loyola's threat apparently had died, for there were scarcely 5 minutes to play.

But the visitors came back quickly to tie the score on a pair of baskets by Bock and one by Cox. Bock's second goal was the deadlocker and for the first time the pro-Georgetown crowd began to worry.

There were only a little more than 2 minutes to go and both teams started to press in their efforts to put in the clinching basket. Georgetown missed several fairly easy shots and Loyola also blew a couple of scoring chances before Murphy tore down the sidelines to his winning basket. Even then Loyola was dangerous and one of its players was poised for a long shot as a Hoya slapped the ball from his hands and the final gun sounded simultaneously to insure the Georgetown victory.

Murphy Is Brilliant

Murphy, lanky senior center, scored almost half of Georgetown's points with seven baskets and a free throw for a total of 15. His goals included one of almost every variety. His set shots were rippling the courts from the vicinity of the foul line and his follow shots, usually released after a feint in the other direction, were clicking well.

Murphy and Schmitt, fleet guard, who tallied five baskets, were the only Georgetown players able to make even a fair percentage of their shots. As a whole the Hoyas were far from impressive, missing many easy short shots and exhibiting a loose defense.

Bock, a very good-looking freshman prospect, paced the losers with 14 points, most of which were made under the basket on fast cutting plays. Cox and Thobe, with 8 and 6 points, respectively, were Loyola's other leading players.

The powerful Georgetown frosh scored a surprisingly one-sided vic-

Nat-Tiger Deal Hits Cold Trail

Griff and Harris Are Pessimistic, Declare Travis Trade Is Off

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

New York, Dec. 13.—Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris, the Washington baseball bosses, apparently struck a cold trail in their hunt for talent tonight at the major league trading sessions.

The projected deal with the Detroit Tigers which would have involved Shortstop Cecil Travis and Catcher Rudy York is definitely off, Harris declared as he wearily sought his bed at the end of the day's conversations.

"We struck a snag. I don't think we'll open the deal again," said Harris. "They offered us players we had no use for."

But if Washington trading history repeats itself, the Detroit-Nats conversations may yet be productive. Some of the most notable trades maneuvered by Clark Griffith have followed in the wake of just such pessimism as the Nats' bosses expressed tonight.

There was evidence, however, that the Nats were turning in another direction in an effort to make a deal. The expressed willingness of the Cleveland Indians to trade Outfielder Earl Averill has intrigued Griffith, and, with the Indians in dire need of infield talent, Travis may land with the Cleveland club.

However, Griffith is in the market primarily for pitchers and he will insist on hurling talent in a

Redskins Fail to Place a Man on First Team; Edwards, Karcher, Smith Named On Second-String Eleven

The Green Bay Packers and New York Giants, winners of the Western and Eastern Division titles, respectively, each placed three men on the 1938 All-League team selected by vote of the ten coaches of the National Football League, it was announced last night. Only four players who made last year's honor team retained places on this year's team, but for the first time in three years no first-year men were given first team rating.

The Green Bay stars honored on the first team were Clarke Hinkle, league-leading scorer named at fullback for the third consecutive season; Don Hutson, fleet end who was second in scoring and pass receiving and tied his own mark of nine touchdowns scored in one season; and Russ Letlow, who earned a guard position for the first time in the three years he has played in the National League.

Giants Place Three

Mel Hein, center; Ed Widseth, tackle; and Ed Danowski, halfback, were the New York Giants players who made the first team. Hein was selected for the pivot post for the sixth consecutive season. Widseth received 46 points, the highest polled by any player this year. Danowski, leading passer of the circuit in 1938, received 25 points for halfback, and also got 16 points, at quarterback, the second highest number for that position.

In addition to Hinkle and Hein who repeated their 1937 performances, Joe Stydahar, Chicago Bears tackle, and Gaynell Tinsley, Chicago Cardinals end, were also named to the first team again in 1938. Other 1938 first team selections were Danny Fortmann, Chicago Bears guard; Ace Parker, Brooklyn Dodgers quarterback; and Lloyd Cardwell, Detroit Lions halfback.

Hutson, Widseth, Fortmann and Danowski were all on the second team in 1937. Bill Hewitt, Philadelphia end; George Musso, Chicago Bears guard; and Turk Edwards, Washington tackle, all of whom made the first team last year, dropped to the second team this season. Letlow, Parker and Cardwell didn't make either the first or second team last year, but each were named to first team positions in 1938.

3 Freshmen Chosen

Although no first-year men made the first team, three were chosen on the second team. They are Bruiser Kinnard, University of Mississippi tackle now with the Brooklyn Dodgers; Byron (Whizzer) White, Rhodes Scholar All-America halfback from Colorado who ended his first and last season of major league football with Pittsburgh as the league's leading ground gainer; and Cecil Isbell, Purdue halfback, now one of the league's leading passers and ground gainers with the Green Bay Packers.

Milt Gantenbein, Green Bay end, and Frank Bausch, Chicago Bears center, were second team choices of 1937 who repeated this year. Jim Karcher, Washington guard; Riley Smith, Washington quarterback, and John Drake, Cleveland fullback, didn't make either the first or second team last year but were chosen on the second team this year.

The coaches balloted for first and second teams. First team selections received five points and second team three points.

Goose Goslin Seeks Nat Coaching Job

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Dec. 13.—Leon (Goose) Goslin, favorite of Washington fandom since the day he broke in with the Nats in 1921, is a candidate for a coaching job with the team in 1939, Bucky Harris revealed tonight.

Terps Meet Clemson

Tiger Cagers Invade College Park for Game Tonight

One of the South's outstanding athletes will be in Clemson's line-up tomorrow night when the Tigers meet Maryland at College Park in the Terps' first home appearance this season.

He is Banks McFadden, All-Southern Conference basketball guard and All-Southern Conference football halfback. Tall and fast, McFadden is reported a better basketball player than a gridman, which, if true, bodes evil for the Terps.

McFadden, who scored 44 points in three Southern Conference tournament games at Raleigh last March, will be remembered by members of the George Washington football squad for his 70-yard touchdown jaunt on the first scrimmage play of their game at Clemson last season.

The Clemson game is Maryland's first of two conference engagements this week. Davidson, which according to its own coach has its best team in years, comes to College Park Friday night.

The Wildcats have an odd but dangerous scoring combination in Jim Cowan, a center who stands 6 feet 4 inches, and Johnny Tice, a 5 foot 5 inch guard who can stand under his teammate's arm-pit. Tice, although he weighs only 135 pounds, is perhaps Davidson's outstanding player.

Maryland plans to employ its usual starting line-up in both games. Adam Bengoechea and George De Witt will be at forwards; Eddie Johnson at center, and George Knepley, an All-Southern Conference choice last season, and Pershing Mondorff at guards.

Maryland announced yesterday that it had asked V. M. I. and Washington and Lee to cancel basketball games scheduled with the Terps, January 16 and 17, respectively. A change in the scheduled midyear examinations at Maryland was the reason for Maryland's request.

March 11 has been set for the University of Maryland's Fifth Regiment indoor games at the Baltimore Armory. Entry blanks will be sent out shortly for this popular annual meet. There will be only slight changes over the 1938 list of events.

Hassett Sent To Boston in Player Deal

Four Men Involved In Swap; Nocturnal Game May Be Started At Griffith Stadium

By Jack Cuddy.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

New York, Dec. 13.—The American League tonight drafted a resolution permitting night baseball to be played throughout its circuit, on a basis somewhat similar to that which now prevails in the National League.

The resolution will be passed tomorrow. Club owners indicated at today's meeting that they favored introduction of the nocturnal game into the American division, after the Philadelphia and Cleveland clubs asked permission to use the arc lights.

This was the most important development at today's opening separate meetings of the National and American League Club owners in the Waldorf-Astoria.

While the magnates were in session, one player deal was announced and other negotiations were rumored.

Hassett Goes to Bees

The Dodgers sent First Baseman Buddy Hassett and Outfielder Jimmy Outlaw and some cash to the Bees in exchange for Pitcher Ira Hutchinson and Outfielder Gene Moore. Although Hassett has been used recently as an outfielder in Brooklyn, he is expected to return to his regular job as first sacker with the Bees. Brooklyn purchased Outlaw recently from the Cardinals.

The night game resolution is expected to permit each American League club to play seven moonlight games on its home grounds. The St. Louis Browns have had special permission to play night ball for the past two season, but they never exercised that right, feeling apparently that it would be inadvisable to install a costly lighting plant at Sportsman's Park before the league adopted the night game.

The national circuit adopted night ball four years ago and the Cincinnati Reds have been playing it since. Brooklyn played under the lights last season. It is quite likely that both St. Louis clubs and both Philadelphia clubs will install lighting systems at their joint parks before 1940, at the latest. Likewise Cleveland and perhaps Washington and other clubs.

Permanent Plan

The only apparent difference between the American League plan for night ball and that which exists in the National division will be the permanence of the American proviso which will permit the night game for all time, whereas it is voted upon each year in the National.

The National League voted today to permit use of the yellow baseball at large crowd games at which batsmen might be bothered by the background of white shirts in the bleachers. Opposing managers must agree to the use of the ball before such games.

Aside from these big-crowd games, Ford Frick's circuit voted to retain its present brand of ball with the somewhat heavy cover and the raised seams. The American division indicated that it is receptive to adopting a uniform ball of the same type as used in the National.

At present the ball in Will Harridge's circuit has a lighter cover and slicker seams, preventing the pitchers from getting their best grip. The American owners will vote on the ball tomorrow. Clark Griffith, of the Washington Senators, offered the proposal for changing the pellet.

Player Limit Raised

The National League voted to raise its player limit from 23 to 25 men, but the American magnates voted instead to keep the 23 limit, with a two-man disability proviso. If one of the 23 men on the squad is disabled, he will be put on the new disability list and another player brought into the squad. However, the injured player must remain on the disability list at least 60 days before he can be taken off and returned to duty. Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis has objected to the practice of having players placed on the voluntarily retired list when injured. The commissioner feels that the voluntary retired list should be restricted to men who are quitting the game for good.

This player limit issue will be threshed out at Thursday's joint meeting of the two leagues, and if the National and American owners are unable to come to an agreement, Commissioner Landis will cast the deciding vote for the National or American plan.

Both leagues rejected the New York Yankees' proposal that players be paid on an eight-months basis, from Febbruary 15 to October 15, instead of by the season. The Yankees believed such a payment basis would lessen the number of holdouts during the spring training period.

Will Harridge was re-elected president, secretary and treasurer of the American circuit for a term of ten years. His previous tenures were for five and three years. Col. Jacob Rupper, owner of the Yankess, was re-elected vice president. Connie Mack, of the Philadelphia Athletics, was named manager of the American team that will compete in next season's centennial all-star game at Yankee Stadium on July 11.

The American League also adopt-

Good Scout

New York, Dec. 13.—They say that William Harold Terry is a very impatient man. He is. When things don't go to suit him he hasn't the patience to sit around and wait for a turn for the better. Instead, he gets up and does something about it.

VIDMER.

Last spring, summer and fall things didn't go to suit William Harrold Terry. His Giants finished third in the National League. That didn't suit William Harold Terry at all. Even if they had finished second it wouldn't have suited him. For with Bill it's everything or nothing. Three times in his six full seasons as manager it has been everything. On the other occasions he has done something about it.

So it was not in the least surprising to see him make enough deals during the off season to reconstruct five-eighths of his regular line-up. Under his present plans, and there is small reason the figure that he will change them, he will have an entirely different infield from the one which started the 1938 campaign.

Last April the Giants took the field with Johnny McCarthy at first, Lou Chiozza at second, Dick Bartell at short and Mel Ott at third. Next April Terry plans to have Zeze Bonura at first, Burgess Whitehead at second, Bill Jurges at short and Myatt at third. Not one of them even was with the Giants when the 1937 season started.

Nor does his reform movement end there. Last year the Giants opened the season with Joe Moore, Hank Leiber and Jimmy Ripple in the outfield. Next spring Terry figures on an outfield composed of Joe Moore, Frank Demaree and Mel Ott. Bill thinks the many changes will cause things to go to suit him.

Stranger in the Midst

Of course, he knows what most of these men are capable of producing in the way of runs, hits and errors. He had Whitehead for a couple of seasons before his breakdown and enforced retirement last spring. Bill knows that if Whitey is physically all right, he is as good a record baseman as there is in the league. He has watched Jurges through several campaigns with the Cubs. He has had plenty of opportunity to observe Demaree with the same club. He had Myatt with him toward the end of the last campaign and was satisfied. In fact, Bill thinks Stanley Hack is the only third baseman in the league who is any better than Myatt.

But what about Bonura? You might well wonder how Terry knows anything about the big first baseman, for Zeke has spent his entire big league career in the American circuit and Bill has spent his in the National. Naturally, Terry has had little opportunity to see Bonura perform, yet he speaks of him with assurance.

"He's a good powerful hitter," Bill was saying as he leaned back in his chair and puffed on a pipe. "And there's nothing wrong with his fielding that can't be corrected. He handles thrown balls faultlessly, but sometimes he goes after balls hit to his right that he should let the second baseman handle, and sometimes he doesn't go after balls to his right that he should take himself."

Friendly Advice

This seemed like very technical information concerning the new Giant first baseman. It sounded as though Terry had watched him and studied him closely. When had he done it all?

Bill laughed.

"I never saw him play in my life," he said, "but I think I have all the dope on him. There's a fellow around who is a pretty good friend of mine. Besides being a good friend, he's a great judge of ball players. In fact I respect his judgment as much as anybody's I know. He's smart and he's keen and he's observant. And he's seen Bonura play plenty of times."

"So he recommended him?"

"Well, not exactly," Terry smiled. "I had Bonura in mind as a possibility and I asked this fellow what he thought of him during the minor league meeting at New Orleans. It was on what he said that I made the deal. For one thing he said that Zonura was one of the toughest fellows to pitch to in the American League. And besides being hard to fool, he had plenty of power. Well, I had a pretty fair idea that he could hit, so I asked about his fielding.

"'Bill,' I was told, 'He's not a bad fielder. He can take care of anything that's thrown at him. All he needs is a little teaching. You could help him unquestionably. The trouble is no one ever tried to help him. But he learns easily and there's no reason you shouldn't make a real first baseman out of him.' That's what I was told and I believed it."

"You must have a lot of faith in this fellow's judgment."

"I have. His name is Bill Dickey."

High School Basketball Season Will Open Today

Anacostia, Devitt Prep Will Clash

Bethesda-Chevy Chase To Battle Western Quint; Both Games Set for 3:30 P. M.

The first, faltering steps of two of the seven interhigh basketball squads will be taken today, when Anacostia's first year Indians play host to Devitt Prep in their brand new gym, and the Red Raiders of Western High meet the solid menace of Bethesda-Chevy Chase on the Western floor. Both games start at 3:30.

Spotlight of the day's hostilities will probably burn on the Western-Bethesda clash, for out of it should issue an accurate forecast of the Westerners' interhigh possibilities. Western has been a disappointing favorite at both basketball and football for the past two seasons. This year Coach Cliff Moore refuses the favorite ranking, hoping the role of underdog will do for his team what the higher rating failed to do.

Only two of the lettermen who brought Western a runner-up tie last year have returned to decorate the Raider roster, Bob Custer and Bob Holloran, both forwards. The other positions will be filled with green, but promising, cagemen. The game will be something of a test for the Bethesdans, too, both of their previous victories being over not-too-rugged opposition.

The game down on the Anacostia flats will be something else again from the competitive standpoint. Devitt, boasting a quintet of former local high school stars, will be an overwhelming favorite despite a loss to the Georgetown Frosh last week and the fact that Anacostia beat it last year. Preppers lost their opening engagement by a single point, to a team which is probably one of the best in Hoya freshman history.

According to Coach Julian Colangelo of the Indians, Anacostia will be forced to start its interhigh cage activity with the barest shreds of a basketball team. Five men he can count on for a respectable performance, but subs are sadly lacking. Colangelo will depend mostly on Jack Koontz, a bespectacled forward, and Johnny Placos, guard. Bob (Flash) Gordon, Shirley Clark and Lambert Anderson will fill out the starting lineup.

The Anacostia reserves consist of a couple of converted gridders, Art Faircloth and Joe Hayes, and a few other lads who only recently came up from the junior varsity. The average age of the squad is 16 years.

Devitt will be paced by such stellar performers of last year as Walt Connolly, formerly of Tech, and Lenny Stanton, the All-High forward from Western's five.

Table Griffith Plan

Clark Griffith's proposal to limit farm systems to one club in each minor league or association was not considered today because Owner Ruppert, of the Yankees, was absent because of illness. The Yankees would be the club most affected by such limitation.

Meanwhile Managers Jimmy Dykes, of the Chicago White Sox, and Joe Cronin, of the Boston Red Sox, were discussing possibilities of exchanging two utility infielders. Dykes would like to get Eric McNair, in return for Boze Berger. Dykes, who played with McNair on the Athletics, believes that Eric will improve if he can get him into a White Sox uniform. This transaction is expected to be announced tomorrow.

Cleveland is negotiating with both Detroit and the Red Sox for a deal in which the Indians might dispose of Pitcher Denny Galehouse and Second Baseman Odell Hale. The Indians would like to get Outfielder Pete Fox from the Tigers or Outfielder Ben Chapman from the Red Sox. Of course other Tiger and Sox players probably would figure in the deal.

13 Wrestlers In Tourney

Will Test Grips at Arena Tomorrow in One-Night Program

The supposedly unlucky total of 13 wrestlers is entered in the one-night tournament scheduled tomorrow at Turner's Arena, with virtually every nationality on the face of the globe represented.

Washington is supplying two contestants in the persons of Frank Brown, who recently established a residence here, and John Heracle, a member of Iron Workers Local, No. 5. Heracle resides in the southeast section of the city, and is an old hand at wrestling.

The cast embraces two Englishmen, an Indian, German, Frenchman, two Irishmen, Dutchman, and a couple of ordinary Americans. One of the Britons is our old friend Walter Percy, and the other is a limey billing himself as Lord Albert Mills, of London. Lord Mills arrived in this country by way of Canada.

Conspicuously absent is the beefy bulk of the Golden Terror, the most unpopular man in Washington, who had threatened to take the entire group and rap their heads together. The fans had visions of seeing the Terror unmasked this week, but he stood on his constitutional rights and balked at the wholesale idea.

Tomorrow's program starts promptly at 8:15 o'clock, 15 minutes earlier than customary, and the preliminary jousts will be limited to 20 minutes, rather than 30. A decision will be rendered by the referee in the event of no fall; and the finalists will go the standard 90-minute distance.

The pairings find Heracle pitted against Jack McArthur; Chief Little Wolf vs. Frank Bowen; Frenchy LaRue vs. Karl Davis; Dutch Schultz vs. Tommy O'Toole; Lord Albert Mills vs. Jim Wright; Walter Percy vs. Bull Martin, and Nick Campofreda (bye). Turner has promised the winner a fat cheque, and a shot at Jim Londos, who is scheduled to appear at the Arena next week.

From a strictly impartial viewpoint it looks like Campofreda and Chief Little Wolf in the finals, although there is no accurate method of measuring Nick's skill. Frank Brown looms as the dark horse of the tournament, but his youth and inexperience appear to be against him.

Brown of American U. was the individual high scorer of the game, scoring six field goals, and two free tosses. Bobb Stropp showed best for the Terrors, scoring 10 points.

Outdoors

The Outdoor Show

Plans for the 1939 North American Sports and Outdoor Show, to be held in Baltimore February 17-25 are shaping up far faster this year that at the initial show last February. There is good reason for that, too, for manufacturers realize now that sportsmen here are more than ready to support their outdoor activities if these are made worthwhile.

ACKERMAN.

There will be again the huge "naturalistic" lake to serve as an aquatic arena for log rolling, canoe tilting and for bait and fly casting contests. Scheduled also are feats of archery and rifle marksmanship, as well as Indian tribal dances, against a background of flowering trees and shrubs to make a setting.

Annual meeting and election of officers of the Washington Chapter of the Izaak Walton League of America for the year 1939 will be held tonight in the aquarium of the Department of Commerce. Even though most of the time will be taken up with current business, there will be much to interest any outdoorsman.

Sunday will see the last turkey shoot of the Bethesda Chapter for this year, at the usual place a mile beyond the Bank of Bethesda on the Rockville pike. In spite of the inclement weather at the last one, two weeks ago, 26 turkeys were shot off, and when you stop to consider that each one counts between $2 and $3 to be added to the fund for the correction of pollution in the Potomac watershed, it leaves one with something to think about.

The drive this summer on pollution will result finally in clearing waters around Washington so that fish will again find it possible to live in them, and Washingtonians to swim in them, safely.

Some readers of this column thought the invitation to attend sounded so inviting they went out to see what it was all about, and most of them took turkeys home with them. Why not get out early for this last one? There is usually someone on deck by 9 o'clock, and the shooting seldom stops until dark.

Capt. Hatch Is Off

The many anglers who have been trying to make reservations with Capt. Bill Hatch for fishing in the Miami and Bimini areas this winter are learning, very much to their regret, that he sets sail around Xmas Day for "down under" with the American Museum-Michael Lerner Expedition to study the large marlin and swordfish of the Great Barrier Reef of Australia. The reef is a battle ground of the giants of the sea, extending for more than 600 miles in windswept seas, but nevertheless attracting each year more and more American anglers to partake of the sport pioneered by Zane Grey.

Hatch does not expect to get back until late in May, and is not sure of that date, so is not making any bookings for April and May. Instead, we recommend Capt. Leo Droughton, whose Diesel cruiser Sampan ran out of Ocean City this summer.

Rods Are Here

Those Tycoon rods we mentioned several weeks ago have arrived, and it is really interesting to hear the comments of the various anglers as they look them over, longingly, in most cases, for the care that goes into these custom-made rods is readily apparent. The unprecedented white marlin season created a demand for a better rod than the majority had been using in this section, and Milton Gordon was one of the first to note the fact.

They are now available in all sizes, from the largest, built to take any fish that swims in the seas, down to the 2-ounce fly rod. The same painstaking laminated construction is used in all, that makes not only for the greatest cross-section strength in any rod built today, but for a marvelous action as well.

Even though you might feel that the pocketbook won't stand one, stop in and look over the set Bill Lee has just received for his trip to Miami and Bimini next month.

Seeing, week after week, one of the finest representive small collections of mounted fish that ever came out of Florida, stacked in one corner of Elmer Higgins office in the United States Bureau of Fisheries, was a little irksome. Thinking that anglers here might like to look them over, too, we prevailed on Mr. Higgins and Bill Briggs, of Eastern Air Lines, to place a few of them in his window. The response was immediate and surprising. The personnel answered more questions on Florida and Florida fishing than they had in many a day.

Because of the interest, the collection will be placed at other vantage points, and shortly after the first of the year in Eastern's window will be the collection of Dr. William B. Wilkins, of Alexandria, which includes authentic models of all the great game fish of the open seas. The collection includes the plank pierced with the bill of a large white marlin off Ocean City this summer, which had the boat in a sinking condition when it arrived at the dock.

We have some pretty swell fish in this area, but there must be more than a modicum of truth in the saying, that "furriners" are interesting because they are strange.

Rice Officials Deny Seeking 'Clipper' Smith

Houston, Dec. 13 (AP).—Officials of Rice Institute today denied a report Maurice J. (Clipper) Smith was being cnosidered in their football plans for 1939.

"It is the first I have heard of it," said J. T. McCants, chairman of outdoor athletics at Rice.

Jimmy Kitts, football coach at Rice, has led the Owls to two Southwest Conference championships since he took charge in 1934.

Long Shots in Second Period Down Terps; Ely, Hoskins and Knepley Are Stars

Special Dispatch to The Post

Richmond, Va., Dec. 13.—Going on a scoring spree after the first half, by long shots, the University of Richmond spiders scored 41 to 34 victory over the University of Maryand Terps here tonight before 1,000 spectators.

Unimpressive during the first half of play, the Spiders were lucky to walk off the court at half time with a 11-11 tie with the Terps.

However, the second half was a different story, the men of Red and Blue came back strong. Jimmy Ely, star Spider guard, flipped two long shots through the hoop to give Richmond a 15-11 lead, which was never headed by the brilliant old liner quint.

With Stuart Hoskins, another Richmond guard, following the example of his running mate and swishing two more field goals from mid-floor, the Spiders took a commanding lead.

The scoring spree put Mac Pitt's boys ahead by 11 points after 5 minutes of the second half had begun.

George Knepley, Maryland's all-Southern Conference guard, led the scoring of both teams by scoring 7 field goals and one foul to account for 15 points of his teammates' scores.

trade involving Travis. With the Cleveland club overstocked with pitchers, Griffith is expected to demand Johnny Humphries, the tall righthander from Clifton Forge, who made a sensational debut with the Indians in 1938. Humphries displayed a speed ball that, on occasion, was "faster than Feller's," according to some critics.

Harris and Griffith are expected to alter their demands on the Tigers when and if trade talk is resumed with the Detroit club. Harris has long admired young George Tebbetts, rookie Detroit catcher, and may accept him in lieu of York, if the Tigers toss in Eldon Auker or another veteran hurler.

The Nats' dealings with the Cleveland and Detroit clubs are hinging on proposed trades involving the latter pair, apparently. The Tigers are eyeing Averill and Lyn Lary, and if they are acquired the Indians may be in a mood to go higher for Travis. Two of Cleveland's regular pitchers would be Griffith's price for Travis if Averill were not included in the deal.

Averill was offered to the Red Sox in a trade involving Ben Chapman and Eric McNair, but the Boston club has need of another left-handed hitting outfielder. Despite the fact that Chapman is available, the Nats are not interested in this .330 hitter. They considered themselves well rid of the temperamental Chapman when he was traded to Boston in 1937.

The bulk of the Washington trade talk is now devolving on Harris inasmuch as Griffith is busily occupied with league affairs. The Nats' manager was in conversation with managers Joe Cronin, Del Baker, Oscar Vitt, Fred Haney and Jimmy Dykes today and tonight, but he foresaw little hope of a deal.

"These fellows are tough to talk to," said Harris. "They're afraid to do business with the Washington club for some reason. Our big hope now is to come up with a couple of young pitchers whom we can buy with some of the cash from the Bonura deal."

Former-big leaguers in search of jobs as coaches, scouts, etc., are a dime a dozen around baseball headquarters . . . The Brooklyn club, with new manager Leo Durocher as chief host, is lavishly entertaining visiting owners, managers and newspapermen in a sumptuous suite . . . Clark Griffith was reported to be in a huff tonight following the rejection by the American League of some of his pet amendments, and is supposedly threatening to balk the attempt to approve night baseball for the league in 1939 . . .

Everything's Ready for the Opening of Fort Myer's First Horse Show of the Season

Schooling of Horses Last Night Showed Some Real Sights; Student Jumping Teams Prepare For Inter-Scholastic Laurels

By Hotspur.

We dropped in at the Fort Myer riding hall last night to watch the schooling of the equine performers that will entertain tonight's crowd at the first indoor show of the winter season. If what we saw is any indication of tonight's exploits by horses and riders the spectators at the Fort Myer Arena will certainly get their money's worth.

Schooling periods are as amusing as a three-ring circus and a vaudeville show combined and last night's rehearsal was no exception. As this is the first show since the Inter-American last October, both horses and riders needed the practice and we saw the jumps of the strange courses negotiated in every conceivable and startling manner—over, under, around and through. If Doc Freud is a horseman—and he well may be—he missed an opportunity to obtain material for a series of lectures on horse and rider psychology by not being present.

For instance, the Herr Dokter would have been interested to see Lieut. "Johnny" Pugh schooling his God o' War. That beautiful chestnut gelding has an inferiority complex. Heredity went haywire in this instance for God o' War's grandpappy is Man o' War. How to handle such a case was demonstrated by his owner, who displayed a brand of patience and firmness that would hearten the most timid soul. As a contrast to God o' War is Sir Conrad, another Pugh entry. A lion-hearted horse is Sir Conrad who took the jumps willingly and with the greatest of ease.

Swing Easy Does It!

There were other cases that would have intrigued the noted psychologist and are worth citing, such as Swing Easy. The striking-looking pinto was exhibited at the Inter-American by his former owner, Donald Southerland, the Brooklyn, N. Y. horseman, and gave indifferent performances because Donald is an indifferent rider. How different Swing Easy looked last night with Gardner Holman in the saddle for his present owner Mrs. George J. Mueller!

Apple Jack, one of the greatest jumpers of this locality, or any other locality for that matter, seems to have recovered from his six months' peeve and looked like the Apple Jack of old on everything in the ring but one jump, an easy picket fence. The big brown gelding seems to have an aversion to that particular jump amounting to a fixation. He would take it from one side but not the other. We'll gamble that his owner and rider, Fenton Fadeley, jr., "psychoanlizes" that out of Apple Jack before tonight.

Marines Are O. K.

Capt. M. L. Curry of the Marine Corps, came near doing a man-overboard act when his Gracias messed up a jump, giving his rider a stunning wallop on the head, but the gallant Marine held on to the shrouds and stuck close to the deck proving that the Marines have everything in hand even on a horse.

Freddy Hughes, jr.'s, new mount, of which we have heard so much, proved to be Ringmaster, once a performer in the McCoy Circus that was sold out in Washington last spring. What Freddy has done to Ringmaster would have interested Doc Freud. After purchasing the bay gelding that had been much abused during his nomadic existence, Freedy nursed the stricken animal back to health and condition and schooled him over the jumps. By his good rounds last night Ringmaster looks like an important factor in future shows.

The teams that are entered in the student team jumping class were milling about the paddock and eyeing each other. Despite the keen rivalry between these contestants, the Keystone Yankees from the Pennsylvania Military College and the Valley Forge Military Academy were not adverse to fraternizing with the Southern bells of Arlington Hall College and the Gunston Hall School.

There's Rocksie

Other incidents we noticed were: The ever reliable Rocksie doing his usual rodeo stunt and thereby giving his owner, Margaret Cotter, a good workout before he got down to business and sailed over the jumps in his smooth way . . . Mary Alice Klumpp's gameness when her mount, Fritz Kleeman's Hard Times, tried to hurdle the 6-foot paddock fence and later threw his rider while crashing into a jump . . . Six Marine officers from Quantico appearing as much at home in the saddle as on land or sea . . . Sam Bogley on his mare, Carrie Knight, of the high-flung rear hooves, in a good performance . . . Army wives in a cluster doing some excellent spectator-seat riding while their husbands were in the ring . . . Bumper, a rank in-and-outer, much improved and a different horse since he has been ridden by Lieut. C. B. Hines . . . Mrs. Nancy McDowell on her good hunter, Modern Melody. Both in fine form . . . The Jitterbug, a little horse but a big jumper, ridden by his owner, Joe Poselle . . . Hi Ho, the horse that promises to be the sensation of the show, ridden faultlessly by his owner ,Lisbeth (Skippy) Steig . . .

Patty Berg Is Voted Outstanding Athlete

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 13.—Polling almost as many votes as she has freckles, young Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, today was chosen the outstanding woman athlete of the year by 45 of the 67 sports writers participating in the eighth annual Associated Press poll.

Miss Berg, who climaxed a brilliant golf campaign by winning the national championship, drew four times as many first-place nominations as her closest competitor, and enough second and third place votes to pile up 164 points to 58 each for Helen Wills Moody and Mrs. Katherine Rawls Thompson.

Mrs. Moody, whose competitive tennis comeback reached its peak in her Wimbledon victory over Helen Jacobs, was named No. 1 on ten ballots. Mrs. Thompson, the country's greatest all-around swimmer, was named first only four times but had more widespread support. The only other girl to place near the leaders was Alice Marble, who got 54 points, chiefly on her feat of recapturing the U. S. tennis title.

Of the nine sports represented by the 18 women who figured in the voting, tennis and golf made the best showings. Tennis placed three in the first ten and had five altogether, while golf had five candidates in addition to Miss Berg.

The tabulation:

	Firsts	Total pts.
Patty Berg, golf	45	164
Helen Wills Moody, tennis	10	58
Katherine Rawls Thompson swimming	4	58
Alice Marble, tennis	5	54
Helen Jacobs, tennis	0	9
Sonja Henie, skating	1	9

Two Horses Finish Even In 2d Race

Lula Khayyam and Enthusiasm in Dead Heat; Betters Split At Charles Town

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 13. A series of thrilling finishes including a dead heat and the first winning favorite in 19 races marked an exciting day of turf action here in the mountains. Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Enthusiasm and H. Massey's Lula Khayyam came to the wire as a team in the second race and the judges consulted the photograph without being able to give either the victory. Thus bettors of both horses had to take half a loaf both in the individual wagering and in the daily double.

Enthusiasm, making his first start in a year, paid $4.80, while Lula Khayyam's backers took down $8.20. In the daily double those with the combination of Enthusiasm and My Pauline collected $71.60 while the Lula Khayyam-My Pauline players took down $161.20.

Both Lock Like Winners

This was the first dead heat here since the installation of the camera and the first since Lady's Favor and Buck Langhorne split a purse a few meetings ago.

Today's rivals came to their even finish after each had all the appearance of a winner. Enthusiasm tossed Jockey Johnny Shanks in the parade to the post and was off poorly. However, Shanks rushed the gelding up to challenge Johnny Bane, the early pacemaker. Entering the stretch, Enthusiasm seemed on the way to victory when Lula Khayyam rallied to take a short lead. Shanks then went to the whip on his mount and regained the lead only to have the game filly "come again" in the closing pair of jumps.

Seldom has a horse made a move like My Pauline did to win the third race and complete the daily double. At the top of the stretch, this filly had only one horse beaten. Travelo seemed the winner at this stage. However, Jockey Garrett never stopped riding My Pauline and, although the press box boys believed she had failed to get up, the camera showed her nose in front. My Pauline paid a $35.20 mutuel. Prosit, an $11.20 shot, won the first race from Welsh Star in a photo finish while the camera also was called on to give Depinard the decision over Whipsnake in the fourth race. Depinard paid $7.20 and broke the spell of beaten favorites.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Enthusiasm (No. 1) and H. Massey's Lula Khayyam (No. 4) locked in an all-even finish at the end of yesterday's second race

LULA KHAYYAM, within striking distance of the pace from the break, rallied when placed for punishment in early stretch, took slight lead and fought it out willingly. ENTHUSIASM, off in close quarters along rail, moved up boldly to dispose of JOHNNY BANE, saved ground entering stretch, came again under punishment after losing lead and barely failed to last. JOHNNY BANE had keen early speed to take command, but weakened gradually after being caught. JAY D. was held safe. The others were not prominent.

THIRD RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:44½. Off 2:46½. Winner, Mrs. E. P. MY PAULINE, far back until straightened out in stretch, came with bold rush on outside to take photo decision. TRAVELO shook off QUICK VINE to get to front, opened a good lead and finished tiring on inside. TRUJILLO followed close up, stumbled several times and closed with good energy. PETER H. was caught in close quarters entering stretch and closed full of run. GOLDEN KEY could not keep up.

Leaders Shut Out In Church Loop

The Takoma Church League's leaders were victims of upsets as Presbyterian No. 2 shut out the leading Emory No. 1, while Catholic whitewashed the second-place Knights. John Coffman, of Presbyterian No. 2, was the individual hero with a 150 game and 390 set. Presbyterian had a 1,692 set and 581 game.

At the Post

Dear Al.

One thing is certain, the horsemen love Charles Town as much in December as they do in May. When I fell for a rumor that this would be the last December meeting here, President Al Boyle was swamped with protesting horsemen. They told him that bad tracks, cold weather or come what may they wanted him and his associates to continue to put up that purse money. And so the December meetings will go on, giving the horsemen a chance to get winter money.

Charles Town's track crew has been able to cope with anything that the weatherman has done to the oval so far. Yesterday, for instance, the track was frozen underneath but there was a nice cushion on the top long before post time for the first race.

Apprentice Jockey F. Law rightly considers himself a lucky younug man. Thanks to the fact that it is compulsory that jockeys here wear metal skull caps, he escaped serious injury here Monday. In returning with Rippling Ray after a race, Law was tossed off into the mud and the horse, unintentionally stepped on his head. The blow put a dent in the headpiece which pressed down and cut Law's head some but otherwise he was unhurt. Just as aviators get into the air again as soon as possible after an accident, Law, with his head bandaged was out yesterday morning working horses as usual.

Alan Clarke, owner of the Huntington Farm near Clarkesville, Md., has been forced to build two new sections of barns due to the large number of horses being sent him. Clarke was credited with the great comeback of Honey Cloud this fall.

One of the things that had not happened here before was recorded yesterday when the lead pony fell down on the way to the post.

BILL.

Selections at Charles Town.

First race — Blue Prelude has plenty of speed and likes this short sprint route. Gets in light and I'm going to string along. Handley is an ancient plater who has worked well and he should be prominent. Twenty for the show.

Second race—Petee Lad probably needed that last and will be ready for a serious effort in this company. Halloo likes the oval and is dangerous. Janstar, third on the also eligible list, will be a keen factor if in action.

Third race—Philigal has proven consistent hereabouts and figures to chalk up another set of brackets in this field. Boro Poker breaks off the rail and will be close up from the break. Tuleyries Lad for the minor award.

Fourth race—Prairie Man turned in a whale of an effort in that recent outing. Off poorly, this one closed like the wind and with a better break may take it all. General Hay and Counora to take care of the place and show.

Fifth race—These horses have been beating each other. The Runner walked away with a similar race last out and gets the call. Ocean Roll and Royal Business get about the same marks and should fill out the pay-off brackets in the order named.

Sixth race—Inactive has a little more class than these and seems to be headed for a win. Needs only to run back to that last. Suntonsun has done about everything asked and will be a keen challenger. Match Point has been performing in good fashion.

Seventh race—Prince Khayyam turned in a victory here and may make it two for the meeting in this field. Never Idol won nicely last out and is a threat. Last Scamp for the show end.

Eighth race (substitute)—If this race is used, I'll take Razzle Dazzle. Truthfully, Canter Belle. Best bet—Inactive.

Coming Year To Be Better, Col. Ayres Says

Public Spending Aids But Cannot Continue Indefinitely, He Says

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Dec. 13.—Business will be better in 1939, Col. Leonard P. Ayres predicted today. But before prosperity can return "pump-priming recovery" must change into a "long-term recovery carried forward by business," he emphasized. Col. Ayres, economist and vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co., made his prediction in an address to the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

"The coming year now promises to be a period of better employment, rising national income and increased volumes of industrial production," he said in his annual forecast. Specifically, he listed these probable developments for 1939:

Industrial production averaging higher than 1938, lower than 1937; national income above 1937; wholesale prices slowly advancing, but commodity prices not changing greatly; freight loadings up 10-20 per cent from 1938; iron, steel, motors output up 30 to 50 per cent; most new construction since 1930; department store sales nearer 1937 than 1938; merchandise imports greater than exports; stocks higher than 1938, lower than 1936; new high records in power, oil refining, tobacco products and average hourly factory wages.

Doubts For Future

"The advance in business activity can be relied upon to continue as long as the outflow of public spending remains undiminished, but we know such spending cannot go on indefinitely," he said. "That fact raises serious questions about the probable course of business in the third and fourth quarters.

"It is as futile for us to believe that we can spend ourselves rich as for us to suppose that a man can drink himself sober. The fatal weakness of such a recovery is that everyone fears it may be only temporary. Merchants enlarge their stocks but not their stores. Everybody tries to play safe."

Col. Ayres said that "business undertakings are about 40 per cent as attractive as they were in the two preceding decades. For nearly a decade the great majority of corporations have been losing money instead of making it.

"Capital which does not replace itself consumes itself. We shall continue to consume our capital until we can restore a normal flow of new capital issues to provide funds for expanding enterprise, which calls for confidence in the prospects of profit."

Pathe Film Drops Dissolution Plan

New York, Dec. 13 (AP).—H. O. Briggs, president of Pathe Film Corporation announced today the company had dropped its plan for dissolution because proxies received from stockholders had fallen far short of the 80 per cent necessary to carry out the scheme.

The announcement was made at the special stockholders meeting called to vote on the proposal. He said the management had received proxies for about 325,000 shares, or 55 to 60 per cent of outstanding shares.

Federal Judge Coxe yesterday denied the motion of the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. to restrain the company from distributing its interest in Du Pont Film Co. to stockholders, without first offering it to the Du Pont concern if stockholders approved the dissolution plan.

Treasury Borrows At 0.013 Per Cent

The Secretary of the Treasury announced last evening that the tenders for $100,000,000, or thereabouts, of 91-day Treasury bills, to be dated December 14, 1938, and to mature March 15, 1939, which were offered on December 9, have been opened at the Federal Reserve banks.

The total applied for was $384,501,000 and the total accepted, $100,716,000. The average price was 99.997, equivalent to a rate of 0.013 per cent.

Retail Advertising Nears 1937 Total

Chicago, Dec. 13.—Continuing a trend which has been apparent since the middle of October, retail newspaper advertising in 81 major American cities again gave indications of approaching the 1937 level during the week ended December 3, according to Advertising Age today.

During that period retail display advertising in all newspapers in the 81 reporting cities totaled 24,377,856 lines. While this is a decrease of 7.3 per cent from the corresponding week of last year, it is a smaller than average decrease for the year as a whole.

Wheat Falls With Full Export Quota

Liverpool Prices Drop Snowfalls in Texas Corn Works Lower

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 13.—Indications that the British market has been used up until next July as an outlet for United States wheat operated today to drag Chicago prices lower.

Traders here virtually ignored news that British mills would buy 25,000,000 bushels of United States wheat this season, an amount 5,000,000 bushels more than was recently announced. Attention focused instead on statements current that aside from the aggregate of subsidized wheat already negotiated for, Great Britain was not exepected to purchase any additional from the United States the rest of the season.

Serving also to influence Chicago values adversely was 1⅞@2⅛ cents tumble of Liverpool quotations. There were late advices, too, telling of heavy wet snowfalls, auspicious for crops, in the Texans Panhandle.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅛@½ lower compared with yesterday's finish. December 63⅞@63¾, May 66½@66⅝; corn ⅜@⅞ down, December 49⅝, May 52@51⅞; oats ⅛ off to ⅛ up; rye showing ¼@⅜ drop, and provisions unchanged to 5 cents setback.

Prices Work Higher in Moderate Trading Market Is Narrow but Undertone Is Firm Demand Continues for Railroad Bonds

New York, Dec. 13.—Stocks edged a bit higher today and while their average gain of 0.27 point was not worthy of special comment, the nature of the advance was such as to spread some cheer among the bullish forces. For trading became active in the final hour at the time the list was enjoying its rally and the above small gain was sufficient to carry the market to approximately the high level reached both last week and the preceding week.

So while the market is still within the confines of the narrow range which has held it for nearly three weeks, it at least threatened to break out on the upside today. Closing prices were near the best for the session and volume topped the million-share mark.

Railroad issues took part in the final runup, steels were strong, good gains were scored by leading aviation shares and the equipments and motors were well cared for. Store stocks were barely steady, the street being disappointed in the reports it is hearing of slack Christmas business and oils made virtually no progress.

Contributing to the buying in the rails was the compilation of October results, published today. This showed net operating income to be above that of the same month last year, the first time such a thing has happened since June, 1937. The carriers are coming to the fore with some orders for rails and other equipment. Carloadings reports also have helped sentiment in this field, the corresponding 1937 figures having been topped now for two successive weeks.

The most active stock today was United Aircraft, which gained a point and scored a new high for the year, as did Sperry, up 2⅝ and Douglas, up 2⅛. Wright Aero jumped 4 and fractional gains were made by other leaders in this division.

Metal Shares Firm

Metal shares generally were firm, the principal news in this industry being the announcement of Phelps Dodge that it has received a contract to supply 3,000,000 pounds of copper for the Bonneville Dam project.

Pathe was an individual feature of the day, selling off 1¾, on announcement that insufficient proxies had been received for today's meeting at which it had been intended to put through the company's proposed dissolution plan. The probability now is that the plan will be dropped.

There was comparatively little business news to influence the market. Bullish forces were cheered by the observations of Col. Leonard P. Ayres, Cleveland economist, who sees promises of better employment, rising national income and increased volume of industrial production in the new year. He warned against trying to buy recovery with borrowed money.

Rail Bonds Advance

Disquieting news from the business front consists of the disappointing retail sales and evidence that in some lines production has been running ahead of consumption.

Motors turned in a good performance, Chrysler adding 2 points and General Motors 1⅜. There was heavy trading in Reo. Individual features included Universal Leaf Tobacco, which jumped 3 points to a new high; Devoe & Raynolds, which recovered 1¾ points of its recent heavy losses and United Fruit, up 2¾ on its dividend announcement.

The bond market enjoyed the best day this month today under the leadership of the secondary rail liens which were almost uniformly higher, and in some cases the gains for some of the roads in receivership ran to 2 points and more. Volume showed an improvement over the preceding day.

Among the Treasury issues a mixed tone prevailed and the range was from minus 3-32 to plus 5-32. Volume was more than double that of Monday.

Among the railroad securities to show moderate gains were the Baltimore & Ohio group, Central of Georgia, New Haven and Milwaukee. Refunding issues of Burlington and Nickel Plate were strong.

The Chicago & Eastern Illinois, Chicago & North Western, St. Louis & San Francisco and Erie groups all were strong, with some of the issues adding more than a point. This was also true for the Missouri-Pacific issues.

In the higher grade rail bonds, strength was shown by Great Northern, Pennsylvania, Louisville & Nashville, Southern Pacific and a few others.

Among the utilities Commonwealth Edison was higher, with the 3½s of 1958 gaining 2¼. A mixed trend was shown by Consolidated Edison and Ohio Edison, while telephone securities were slightly up.

In the foreign department the Colombian Antioquia issues all showed slight gains, as did scattered Chilean issues, and Peruvian bonds. Other Latin American issues were mixed in trend and slight gains were made by some of the Tokyo obligations.

Export Trade Increases for Third Month

278 Million in October 16.5% Under Year Ago Imports at Year's High

New York, Dec. 13.—The value of merchandise exported from the United States rose in October for the third consecutive months, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute today. It amounted to $278,000,000, as compared with $246,000,000 in September and with the 1938 low of $228,000,000 in July. The value of exports in October, however, was 16.5 per cent smaller than in the corresponding month last year, when it amounted to $333,000,000.

The upward trend of exports during the three months ended with October was aided by an improvement in the ability of foreign countries to finance the purchase of American goods as the result of increased buying of foreign goods by the United States. The value of merchandise imported into the United States rose in October to the highest level of the year. Imports amounted to $178,000,000, as compared with $168,000,000 in September and with the 1938 low of $141,000,000 in July.

Imports Under Year Ago

Imports, however, were 20.5 per cent smaller than in October last year, when they were valued at $224,000,000. This reduction in imports from a year ago helps to explain why exports from the United States in October failed to reach the level of a year ago.

As it was, the export trade of the United States in October exceeded the value of imports by $100,000,000. The ability of foreign countries to finance this excess was the result of shipments of gold and silver, especially gold, to the United States. Net gold and silver exports to this country in October were exceptionally heavy, amounting to $586,000,000. Consequently, they were sufficient not only to finance the excess of United States merchandise exports over imports, but to provide a surplus of $486,000,000. In other words, foreign countries were in position to purchase an even greater amount of goods from the United States in October than they actually did, despite the failure of the United States to buy a corresponding amount of goods from abroad.

New Taxation Seen as Spur To Business

Incentives Include Profit-Sharing, Employment Record

New York, Dec. 13.—Some of the new taxes under discussion in Washington may offer business an incentive for adopting a particular policy, instead of being designed primarily to restrict industry or to raise revenues. Incentive taxation, according to a study of these new tax proposals by the economic research division of the National Industrial Conference Board, is defined as the use of taxing power to induce individuals or businesses to pursue a course which otherwise they would not pursue.

Among the types of incentive taxation now under consideration by the Federal Government is the proposal to grant exemptions from Federal income and profits taxes to companies which share their profits with employes. Such tax exemptions would probably induce more companies to adopt profit-sharing plans. It is doubtful, however, if profit sharing would become widespread, because many concerns could not take advantage of the tax exemptions.

Another suggestion is that rates for property taxes should depend on the percentage of capacity at which a company's plant facilities are operated. For instance, if a plant is operated at 100 per cent of capacity, it might be taxed at one-half the present tax rates. On the other hand, if a plant were operated at only 50 per cent of capacity, the present property taxes might be doubled.

The object of this proposed taxation is to stimulate production, but the conference board's study shows that punishment as well as incentive would result. Some companies producing durable goods, for example, might not be able to keep plants operating at full capacity and would suffer penalties under the suggested tax rates.

A third type of incentive taxation is the plan of rating companies according to their experience under State unemployment compensation laws. If a concern keeps its employment at a uniform level over a number of years, the company will benefit by a lower tax rate. Since this plan is designed to stabilize employment, it is often regarded as a desirable adaptation of the incentive principle.

Dr. Joseph Hill, Statistician Of Census, Dies

40 Years in Service Of U. S. and Long a Leader in His Field

Dr. Joseph A. Hill, 78, for more than 40 years a statistician with the Census Bureau, died of a heart attack Monday night at his home, 1826 Irving street northwest.

Long a leader in the field of statistical research, he joined the Census Bureau in 1898 and 11 years later was appointed chief statistician. In 1920 he was named assistant director for the fourteenth decennial census and served in the same capacity during the census of 1930. Dr. Hill was appointed chief statistician for statistical research five years ago and held that position at the time of his death.

Praised by Director

When informed of the death of his associate, Census Director William L. Austin declared that "Dr. Hill died as he had wished—in the service of the bureau. Because of his ability and faithful service, together with his conscientious devotion to duty, he will be sadly missed by the officials and employes of the Census Bureau. I have never known anyone in the Federal service whose devotion to duty exceeded that of Dr. Hill."

A native of Stewartstown, N. H., he was the son of the late Rev. Dr. Joseph Bancroft Hill and the late Mrs. Harriet Brown Hill. After attending Phillips Exter Academy, he entered Harvard University from which he was graduated in 1885. He received his master's degree from the same university two years later. At the instance of his distant relative, the late Henry Adams, historian, he continued his graduate work at the University of Halle, Germany, from which he received a degree of doctor of philosophy in 1893. Before joining the Census Bureau, Dr. Hill was a lecturer at the University of Pennsylvania and an instructor at Harvard.

Member of Many Clubs

Dr. Hill, who was president of the American Statistical Association in 1919, also was a member of the American Economic Association, the International Statistical Institute, the Cosmos Club and the Harvard Clubs of Boston and New York.

He is survived by a brother, the Rev. Dr. Bancroft Hill, of Vassar College, and three nephews, Gen. John Phillip Hill, former Representative from Maryland and former United States district attorney of that State who now lives at the Army and Navy Club here; Dr. Eben Clayton Hill, Baltimore physician, and Bancroft Hill, president of the Baltimore Transit Co.

EXTRA CHRISTMAS MONEY IS IN YOUR ATTIC

Look in your attic. Isn't that where you put that outgrown toy . . . that table or bicycle . . . that stove you thought would come in handy some day? Everyone has articles in the attic or cellar they never use, but which other people would gladly buy. Now is a good time to sell those discarded articles for extra Christmas cash. Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

"One of the fascinating things about watching bridge players 'at work' is the respective manner in which they shuffle and later arrange the cards in their hands," says an anonymous writer. "Haven't you noticed the different ways in which players handle the cards?" he asks.

"Veteran players will shuffle them with a flip of the thumbs, holding them a second before allowing them to pour back into position in a smooth roll. Others lay them corner-down on the table to complete the shuffle. Some have the "basket" shuffle in which they hold them in one hand and pull them apart in an aimless way. Some do a good deal of slapping and noise-making in the shuffle, while others are quiet and unobtrusive about it.

"When they pick up the cards they are roughly classified as 'stuffers,' 'pullers,' 'arrangers' or 'dubbers.' The first group select the various suits and poke the consecutive cards alongside the next higher ones until they have them arranged. The pullers, usually more rapid, yank the suit cards from the top of the hand until they have them all in their right hand more or less accurately in order."

"The East and West players of today's hand must have had their clubs mixed in with their spades or their hearts with their diamonds, for they reached a shaky four-spade contract when they could have easily defeated their adversary's one heart call. Even at that, the four-spade contract might have been made, but poor play and good defense united to defeat it.

"The hand is contributed by B. Russel Herts, who describes it as follows:

"This hand should have been played in one heart doubled, or in no trump or in two diamonds, or anything rather than four spades, but it was played in four spades and it might have been made if trumps were never touched. The interesting part of the play was the underlead of the ace, jack of hearts by North.

"The king of diamonds was opened, the ace was taken and a spade led. The first spade lead was not won by the ace but the second lead was, and a third spade was returned by North. This left only one trump in declarer's hand.

"Declarer took the last spade lead in his own hand and led a club; the jack was played, forcing the king. West could not then afford to set up the good diamonds in my hand, so he played the ace of clubs and then another club, which my partner took with the queen.

"North then led a small heart and my nine forced the queen in declarer's hand. West could, of course, take his trump and his good diamond, but he would then have to lose hearts to my partner or diamonds to me. The hand was defeated one trick, as we made two heart tricks, one club trick and one spade trick."

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

FROM the Interior Department Recreation Association comes the nomination of Miss Viola Byrne for the title of "Miss Civil Service." This pretty North Carolina girl is a typist in the legal division of the Interior Department and an I. D. R. A. enthusiast. It is a pleasure to include her name in the growing field of nominees.

MISS BYRNE

NECESSARILY, perhaps, the discipline among penal institution employes is rigid; and, understandably the wardens keep a keen eye on the personnel activities.

This discipline has, indeed, been so strict that many employes have been fearful of joining employe organizations. It should be said that this apprehension has not resulted from any attitude held by the prison service officials in Washington. Almost to a man, they have been cooperative. But knowing the attitude of a few wardens, the American Federation of Government Employes requested a statement from Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, who replied, as follows:

"There seems to be no occasion at this time to issue a general statement with respect to the attitude of the Department of Justice toward employes affiliating with organizations of Government employes. The public statements of the President and the acts of Congress are controlling and are, of course, well known to all of the officials and employes of this and other departments. The Bureau of Prisons, to which you refer, will scrupulously maintain these standards in letter and in spirit."

SOME TIME ago this column noted the retirement of Dr. C. B. Smith from the Extension Service of Agriculture, indicating that after his 42 years in the Government employ he would return to his Michigan farm for the remainder of his life. Now Dr. Smith writes in the Extension Service Review just what he intends to do—and it seems of very human stuff:

"After 30 years in extension and 42 years in Government service, we are closing the chapter and starting on another page. We shall go from the office back to the farm for the remainder of our days, there to putter around at odd jobs, help where we can, make a garden, walk over the fields, watch the crops grow, fish and hunt some, ramble along the streams and through the forests when we want to, renew our acquaintances with the neighbors, and vote on election day. This, you will note, is not a very ambitious program, but it would seem to meet our needs at the present time. One is not so ambitious at 68 as at 28."

A drive to win a $1,200 minimum for all Social Security Board employes is under way by the United Federal Workers of America. They recently distributed a questionnaire to gather facts on employes earning less than the proposed minimum and have submitted the resulting data to the board. Among these facts were: About 40 per cent are married, an additional 25 per cent have home obligations, more than half have had to borrow an average of $84 in the past year; 40 per cent go to school and others have indicated a lack of funds for this purpose, very few save any money and then rarely over $3 a month.

The SSB employes here about 100 individuals classified at CU-2, with a base pay rate of $1,080 a year. Some of these have been increased to $1,140. "U. F. W. A. regards this wage as unreasonably low, particularly in relation to the cost of living in the District, and therefore proposes at this time that the SSB adopt as policy: 1. The employment, in future, of persons at the classification of CU-3 or higher, and 2. The reclassification upwards of present incumbents who are classified at a lower grade." A conference on the matter will be held this week.

NOTES—An innovation at the West Virginia State Society dance Friday night at the Raleigh Hotel—they will bring a lot of apple cider and ginger bread from West Virginia for all the members and guests. Officers to be installed before the dance are Maj. H. H. Rice, president; J. W. Smith, Thomas Cain, Mrs. E. E. Nunnally, Flora Miles and George Barr, vice presidents; Mrs. Sada Shinn, financial secretary; Lyman Knight, secretary; Mayme Hamrick, treasurer, and J. E. Goshorn, historian.

Bob Burns Says—

Every once in a while, you read about some actor or actress walkin' out of a studio and refusing to come back to work until their arguments are all ironed out. You probably wonder why they do this. It's because the picture business is pretty much like any other line of business. If you don't kick once in a while, you'll find that you're not only underpaid, but the boss even gets suspicious of you.

My Uncle Skinny Flint had a young fella workin' for him who never kicked. In about ten years, Uncle Skinny got suspicious of him and had a private detective put on his trail. The detective reported that the young fella lived simply, modestly and decently. Uncle Skinny jumped to his feet and says, "That settles it! That fella can't live decently on the salary that I pay him!"

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

The End of a Trail

"I had no idea that a walk in the snow could be so interesting or so exciting," declared Sue as with Sammy she followed Farmer Brown's boy through the Old Orchard toward the Green Forest. "Look, Tommy, at that little brown bird with the white breast down near the bottom of that tree. I've never seen that one before. Who is it?"

Farmer Brown's boy looked where Sue was pointing. "That is Seep-Seep the Brown Creeper," said he. "It is some time since I have seen him around and I'm glad to see him."

"Why?" This was from Sammy.

"Because when he is around in winter I know that there will be a lot fewer insects next summer," replied Tommy.

"How so?" Sammy wanted to know.

"Watch him," replied Tommy. "He started down at the foot of that tree and he is going right up the trunk round and round in a spiral and he is picking eggs, insect eggs, out from under the bark, and believe you me he doesn't miss many. He and Tommy Tit the Chickadee are little but mighty. They do a great job on the trees every winter. Some egg collectors, those fellows are!"

"But he is such a little fellow. Do you mean to say that he stays all winter?" said Sue.

"He sure does," replied Tommy. "Hello! Happy Jack has been out looking for his breakfast." Tommy pointed to some prints in the snow.

"I thought Squirrels have storehouses so that they won't have to look for food in winter," said Sammy.

"Some do. Chatterer the Red Squirrel does. But Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel simply hides a nut here and a nut there under the leaves or buried in the ground. Then in winter he hunts for them and digs them up."

"How can he find them when the ground is covered with snow?" Sue asked.

"I don't know, but he does." See there where he scraped away the snow and a few leaves. He got an acorn there for right over there is where he sat down and ate it. If we kept on following his trail we probably would come to where he had uncovered more Look! There is Chatterer's trail from this tree to that one over yonder. You see, it is smaller than his cousin's. And there is the rascal himself scolding us!"

Tommy was right. They could not see Chatterer but they could hear him and they knew by the way he was scolding that he saw them and was telling them that they had no business over there in the Green Forest.

Then Sue spied a very small trail. "I suppose a Mouse made that," said she.

Tommy squatted down and examined it carefully. "Yes," he agreed, "a Mouse made that. It was a White-footed Mouse or Deer Mouse. Some folks call it one and some, the other."

Sammy looked at his cousin a wee bit skeptically. "How do you know it wasn't a Field Mouse?" he demanded.

"That's easy," retorted Tommy. "Anyone should know that. There is the mark of his tail. A Meadow Mouse has only a stub of a tail."

The dainty little trail led this way and that way from tree to tree, under low hemlock branches that just cleared the snow, crossing and recrossing. The Mouse had gone down in a hole beside the trunk of a tree and come out again. Scattered there were the husks of some seeds. And then they came to the end of the trail. It was right out in the middle of an open space where not so much as a twig broke the smooth white surface. There was no hole. The trail simply ended. Hunt as they would they could find no more trace of that Mouse. Where had he gone? That is what Sue and Sammy wanted to know.
